

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

III. The words are more correctly spelled, partly by attention to their etymology, and partly by observation of the practice of the best authors.

IV. The etymologies and derivations, whether from foreign languages or from native roots, are more diligently traced, and more distinctly noted.

V. The senses of each word are more copiously enumerated, and more clearly explained.

VI. Many words occurring in the elder authors, such as Spenser, Shakespeare, and Milton, which had been hitherto omitted, are here carefully inserted; so that this book may serve as a glossary or expository index to the poetical writers.

VII. To the words, and to the different senses of each word, are subjoined from the large dictionary, the names of those writers by whom they have been used; so that the reader who knows the different periods of the language, and the time of its authors, may judge of the elegance or prevalence of any word, or meaning of a word; and without recurring to other books, may know what are antiquated, what are unusual, and what are recommended by the best authority.

The words of this dictionary, as opposed to others, are more diligently collected, more accurately spelled, more faithfully explained, and more authentically ascertained. Of an abstract it is not necessary to say more; and I hope, it will not be found that truth requires me to say less.

N. B. The Editors of this Dublin Edition have endeavoured to render it more worthy of the public attention, by adding at full length, the Author's curious preface to the Folio Edition, his History of the English language, and by inserting in their proper places, above 500 Words from the Folio Edition, none of which are contained in the London Octavo: As to the Paper, Print and Correction, they will be found, on comparison, much superior, although the Book is given for near one half of the price of the London Edition.

P R E F A C E

To the FOLIO EDITION.

IT is the fate of those who toil at the lower employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the prospect of good ; to be exposed to censure, without hope of praise ; to be disgraced by miscarriage, or punished for neglect, where success would have been without applause, and diligence without reward.

Among these unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries ; whom mankind have considered, not as the pupil, but the slave of science, the pioneer of literature, doomed only to remove rubbish and clear obstructions from the paths of Learning and Genius, who press forward to conquest and glory, without bestowing a smile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progress. Every other author may aspire to praise ; the lexicographer can only hope to escape reproach, and even this negative recompense has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithstanding this discouragement, attempted a dictionary of the English language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every species of literature, has itself been hitherto neglected, suffered to spread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance, resigned to the tyranny of time and fashion, and exposed to the corruption of ignorance, and caprices of innovation.

When I took the first survey of my undertaking, I found our speech copious without order, and energetic without rules : wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be disentangled, and confusion to be regulated ; choice was to be made out of boundless variety, without any established principle of selection ; adulterations were to be detected, without a settled test of purity ; and modes of expression to be rejected or received, without the suffrages of any writers of classical reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no assistance but from general grammar, I applied myself to the perusal of our writers ; and noting whatever might be of use to ascertain or illustrate any word or phrase, accumulated in time the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, establishing to myself in the progress of the work, such rules as experience and analogy suggested to me ; experience, which practice and observation were continually encreasing ; and analogy, which, though in some words obscure, was evident in others.

In adjusting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unsettled and fortuitous, I found it necessary to distinguish those irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which though inconvenient, and in themselves once unnecessary, must be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be registered, that they may not be encreased, and ascertained, that they may not be confounded : but every language has likewise its improprieties and absurdities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or proscribe.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of necessary or common use were spoken before they were written ; and while they were unfixed by any visible signs, must have been spoken with great diversity, as we now observe those who cannot read to catch sounds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was first reduced to an alphabet, every

every penman endeavoured to exprefs, as he could, the founds which he was accustomed to pronounce or to receive, and vitiated in writing fuch words as were already vitiated in fpeech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, muft have been vague and unfettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the fame found by different combinations.

From this uncertain pronunciation arife, in a great part, the various dialects of the fame country, which will always be obferved to grow fewer, and lefs different, as books are multiplied; and from this arbitrary representation of founds by letters, proceeds that diverfity of fpelling obfervable in the Saxon remains, and I fuppofe in the firft book of every nation, which perplexes or deftroys analogy and produces anomalous formations, which, being once incorporated, can never be afterward difmiffed or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivatives length from long, ftrength from ftong, darling from dear, breadth from broad, from dry, drought, and from high, height, which Milton, in zeal for analogy, writes hight; Quid te exempta juvat ſpinis de pluribus una; to change all would be too much, and to change one is nothing.

This uncertainty is moft frequent in the vowels, which are fo capricioufly pronounced, and fo differently modified, by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every mouth, that to them, as is well known to etymologiſts, little regard is to be ſhewn in the deduction of one language from another.

Such defects are not errors in orthography, but ſpots of barbariſm impreſſed fo deep in the Engliſh language, that criticiſm can never waſh them away; theſe, therefore, muſt be permitted to remain untouched: but many words have likewiſe been altered by accident, or depraved by ignorance, as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and ſome ſtill continue to be variously written, as authors differ in their care or ſkill: of theſe it was proper to enquire the true orthography, which I have always conſidered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore referred them to their original languages: thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchanter, after the French, and incarnation after the Latin; thus entire, is choſen rather than intire, becauſe it paſſed to us not from the Latin integer, but from the French entier.

Of many words it is difficult to ſay whether they were immediately received from the Latin or the French, ſince at the time when we had dominions in France, we had Latin ſervice in our churches. It is, however, my opinion, that the French generally ſupplied us; for we have few Latin words, among the terms of domeſtick uſe, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to ſacrifice uniformity to cuſtom; thus I write, in compliance with a numberleſs majority, convey and inweigh, deceit and receipt, fancy and phantom; ſometimes the derivative varies from the primitive, as explain and explanation, repeat and repetition.

Some combinations of letters having the ſame power are uſed indifferently without any diſcoverable reaſon of choice, as in choak, choke; ſoap, ſope; ſewel, ſuel, and many others; which I have ſometimes inserted twice, that thoſe who ſearch for them under either form, may not ſearch in vain.

In examining the orthography of any doubtful word, the mode of ſpelling by which it is inserted in the ſeries of the dictionary, is to be conſidered as that to which I give, perhaps not often raſhly, the preference. I have left, in the examples, to every author his own practice unmoleſted, that the reader may balance ſuffrages, and judge between us: but this queſtion is not always to be determined by reputed or by real learning; ſome men, intent upon greater things, have thought little on ſounds and derivations; ſome, knowing in the ancient tongues

have neglected those in which our words are commonly to be sought. Thus Hammond writes fecibleness for feasibleness, because I suppose he imagined it derived immediately from the Latin; and some words, such as dependant, dependent; dependance, dependence, vary their final syllable, as one or other language is present to the writer.

In this part of the work, where caprice has long wanted without controul, and vanity sought praise by petty reformation, I have endeavoured to proceed with a scholar's reverence for antiquity, and a grammarian's regard to the genius of our tongue. I have attempted few alterations, and among those few, perhaps the greater part is from the modern to the ancient practice; and I hope I may be allowed to recommend to those, whose thoughts have been, perhaps, employed too anxiously on verbal singularities, not to disturb, upon narrow views, or for minute propriety, the orthography of their fathers. It has been asserted, that for the law to be known, is of more importance than to be right. Change, says Hosker, is not made without inconvenience, even from worse to better. There is in constancy and stability a general and lasting advantage, which will always overbalance the slow improvements of gradual correction. Much less ought our written language to comply with the corruptions of oral utterance, or copy that which every variation of time or place makes different from itself, and imitate those changes, which will again be changed, while imitation is employed in observing them.

This recommendation of steadiness and uniformity does not proceed from an opinion, that particular combinations of letters have much influence on human happiness; or that truth may not be successfully taught by modes of spelling fanciful and erroneous: I am not yet so lost in lexicography, as to forget that words are the daughters of earth, and that things are the sons of heaven. Language is only the instrument of science, and words are but the signs of ideas: I wish, however, that the instrument might be less apt to decay, and that signs might be permanent, like the things which they denote.

In settling the orthography, I have not wholly neglected the pronunciation, which I have directed, by printing an accent upon the acute or elevated syllable. It will sometimes be found, that the accent is placed by the author quoted, on a different syllable from that marked in the alphabetical series; it is then to be understood, that custom has varied, or that the author has, in my opinion, pronounced wrong. Short directions are sometimes given where the sound of letters is irregular; and if they are sometimes omitted, defect in such minute observations will be more easily excused, than superfluity.

In the investigation both of the orthography and signification of words, their ETYMOLOGY was necessarily to be considered, and they were therefore to be divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word, is that which can be traced no further to any English root; thus circumspect, circumvent, circumstance, attude, concave, and complicate, though compounds in the Latin, are to us primitives. Derivatives, are all those that can be referred to any word in English of greater simplicity.

The derivatives I have referred to their primitives, with an accuracy sometimes needless; for who does not see that remoteness comes from remote, lovely, from love, concavity from concave, and demonstrative from demonstrate? but this grammatical exuberance the scheme of my work did not allow me to repress. It is of great importance in examining the general fabrick of a language, to trace one word from another, by noting the usual modes of derivation and inflection; and uniformity must be preserved in systematical works, though sometimes at the expence of particular propriety.

Among other derivatives I have been careful to insert and elucidate the anomalous

P R E F A C E.

Our knowledge of the northern literature is so scanty, that of words undoubtedly Teutonic the original is not always to be found in any ancient language, and I have therefore inserted Dutch or German substitutes, which I consider not as radical but parallel, not as the parents, but sisters of the English.

The words which are represented as thus related by descent or cognation, do not always agree in sense; for it is incident to words, as to their authors, to degenerate from their ancestors, and to change their manners when they change their country. It is sufficient, in etymological enquiries, if the senses of kindred words be found such as may easily pass into each other, or such as may both be referred to one general idea.

The etymology, so far as it is yet known, was easily found in the volumes where it is particularly and professedly delivered; and, by proper attention to the rules of derivation, the orthography was soon adjusted. But to COLLECT the WORDS of our language was a task of greater difficulty: the deficiency of dictionaries was immediately apparent; and when they were exhausted, what was yet wanting must be sought by fortuitous and unguided excursions into books, and gleaned as industry should find, or chance should offer it, in the boundless chaos of a living speech. My search, however, has been either skilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

As my design was a dictionary, common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names; such as Arian, Socinian, Calvinist, Benedictine, Mahometan; but have retained those of more general nature, as Heathen, Pagan.

Of the terms of art I have received such as could be found either in books of science or technical dictionaries; and have often inserted, from philosophical writers, words which are supported perhaps only by a single authority, and which being not admitted into general use, stand yet as candidates or probationers, and must depend for their adoption on the suffrage of futurity.

The words which our authors have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonness, by compliance with fashion, or lust of innovation, I have registered as they occurred, though commonly only to censure them, and warn others against the folly of naturalizing useless foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by design, merely because they were unnecessary or exuberant; but have received those which by different writers have been differently formed, as viscid, and viscidit, viscous, and viscosity.

Compounded or double words I have seldom noted, except when they obtain a signification different from that which the components have in their simple state. Thus highwayman, woodman, and horsecourser, require an explication; but of chaise or coachdriver no notice was needed, because the primitives contain the meaning of the compounds.

Words arbitrarily formed by a constant and settled analogy, like diminutive adjectives in ish, as greenish, bluish, adverbs in ly, as dully, openly, substantives in ness, as wiliness, faultiness, were less diligently sought, and many sometimes have been omitted, when I had no authority that invited me to insert them; not that they are not genuine and regular offsprings of English roots, but because their relation to the primitive being always the same, their signification cannot be mistaken.

The verbal nouns in ing, such as the keeping of the castle, the leading of the army, are always neglected, or placed only to illustrate the sense of the verb, except when they signify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwelling, living; or have an absolute and abstract signification, as colouring, painting, learning.

P R E F A C E.

The participles are likewise omitted, unless, by signifying rather qualities than action, they take the nature of adjectives: as a thinking man, a man of prudence; a pacing horse, a horse that can pace: these I have ventured to call participial adjectives. But neither are these always inserted, because they are commonly to be understood, without any danger of mistake, by consulting the verb.

Obsolete words are admitted, when they are found in authors not obsolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deserve revival.

As composition is one of the chief characteristicks of a language, I have endeavoured to make some reparation for the universal negligence of my predecessors, by inserting great numbers of compounded words, as may be found under after, fore, new, night, fair, and many more. These, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that use and curiosity are here satisfied, and the frame of our language and modes of our combination amply discovered.

Of some forms of composition, such as that by which re is prefixed to note repetition, and un to signify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, because the use of these particles, if not wholly arbitrary, is so little limited, that they are hourly affixed to new words as occasion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of composition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which arises to foreigners the greatest difficulty. We modify the signification of many verbs by a particle subjoined; as to come off, to escape by a fetch; to fall on, to attack; to fall off, to apostatize; to break off, to stop abruptly; to bear out, to justify; to fall in, to comply; to give over, to cease; to set off, to embellish; to set in, to begin a continual tenour; to set out, to begin a course or journey; to take off, to copy; with innumerable expressions of the same kind, of which some appear wildly irregular, being so far distant from the sense of the simple words, that no sagacity will be able to trace the steps by which they arrived at the present use. These I have noted with great care; and though I cannot flatter myself that the collection is complete, I believe I have so far assisted the students of our language, that this kind of phraseology will be no longer insuperable; and the combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be easily explained by comparison with those that may be found.

Many words yet stand supported only by the name of Bailey, Ainsworth, Philips, or the contracted Dict. for Dictionary subjoined: of these I am not always certain that they are read in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of such I have omitted many, because I had never read them; and many I have inserted, because they may perhaps exist, though they have escaped my notice: they are, however, to be yet considered as resting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I considered as useful, or know to be proper, though I could not at present support them by authorities, I have suffered to stand upon my own attestation, claiming the same privilege with my predecessors of being sometimes credited without proof.

The words, thus selected and disposed, are grammatically considered: they are referred to the different parts of speech; traced when they are irregularly inflected, through their various terminations; and illustrated by observations, not indeed of great or striking importance, separately considered, but necessary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by English grammarians.

The part of my work on which I expect malignity most frequently to fasten, is the Explanation; in which I cannot hope to satisfy those, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleased, since I have not always been able to satisfy myself. To interpret

interpret a language by itself is very difficult ; many words cannot be explained by maxims, because the idea signified by them has not more than one appellation ; or by paraphrase, because simple ideas cannot be described. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unsettled and indefinite, and various in various minds, the words by which such notions are conveyed, or such things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And such is the fate of hapless lexicographer, that not only darkness, but light, impedes and distresses it ; things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illustrated. To explain, requires the use of terms less abstruse than that which is to be explained, and such terms cannot always be found ; for as nothing can be proved but by supposing something intuitively known, and evident without proof, so nothing can be defined but by the use of words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the sense is too subtle and evanescent to be fixed in a paraphrase ; such are all those which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and, in dead languages, are suffered to pass for empty sounds, of no use but to fill a verse, or to modulate a period, but which are easily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphasis, though it be sometimes such another form of expression can convey.

My labour has likewise been much increased by a class of verbs too frequent in the English language, of which the signification is so loose and general, the sense vague and indeterminate, and the senses distorted so widely from the true idea, that it is hard to trace them through the maze of variation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumscribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of distinct and settled meaning : such are bear, break, bear, cast, full, get, give, do, put, set, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of itself the whole power is not accurately delivered, it must be remembered, that since our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every one that speaks it, these words are hourly shifting their relations, and can no more be ascertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a storm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations applied with so great latitude, that they are not easily reducible under any regular scheme of explication ; this difficulty is, indeed, not perhaps greater, in English, than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with success ; such at least as can be expected in a task, which no man, however learned or sagacious, has yet been able to perform.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, because I do not understand them ; these might have been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not so far indulge my vanity as to decline this confession : for when Tully calls himself ignorant whether lessus, in the twelve tables, means a funeral song, or mourning garment ; and Aristotle doubts whether αἶψα, in the Iliad, signifies a male, or muleteer, I may freely, without shame, leave some obscurities to supply industry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, should be always reciprocal ; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are seldom exactly synonymous ; a new term is not introduced, but because the former was thought inadequate : names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was necessary to use the proximate word, for the deficiency of single terms can very seldom be supplied by circumlocution ; nor is the inconvenience great of such mutilated interpretations, because the sense may easily be collected entire from the examples.

P R E F A C E.

In every word of extensive use, it was requisite to mark the progress of its meaning, and show by what gradations of intermediate sense, it has passed from its primitive to its remote and accidental signification; so that every foregoing explanation should tend to that which follows, and the series be regularly concatenated from the first notion to the last.

This is specious, but not always practicable; kindred senses may be so interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be disentangled, nor any reason be assigned why one should be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a consecutive series be formed of senses in their nature collateral? The shades of meaning sometimes pass imperceptibly into each other; so that though on one side they apparently differ, yet it is impossible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the same race, though not exactly alike, are sometimes so little different, that no words can express the dissimilitude, though the mind easily perceives it, when they are exhibited together; and sometimes there is such a confusion of acceptations, that discernment is wearied, and distinction puzzled, and perseverance herself hurries to an end, by crowding together what she cannot separate.

These complaints of difficulty will, by those that have never considered words beyond their popular use, be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his studies by involution and obscurity. But every art is obscure to those that have not learned it: this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to those who have joined philosophy with grammar; and if I have not expressed them very clearly, it must be remembered that I am speaking of that which words are insufficient to explain.

The original sense of words is often driven out of use by their metaphorical acceptations, yet must be inserted for the sake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is used for material heat, or whether flagrant, in English, ever signifies the same with burning; yet such are the primitive ideas of these words, which are therefore set first, though without examples, that the figurative senses may be commodiously deduced.

Such is the exuberance of signification which many words have obtained, that it was scarcely possible to collect all their senses; sometimes the meaning of derivatives must be sought in the mother term, and sometimes deficient explanations of the primitive may be supplied in the train of derivation. In any case of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the same race; for some words are slightly passed over to avoid repetition, some admitted easier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better understood, as they are considered in a greater variety of structures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the same skill, or the same happiness: things equally easy in themselves, are not all equally easy to any single mind. Every writer of a long work commits errors, when there appears neither ambiguity to mislead, nor obscurity to confound him; and in a search like this, many felicities of expression will be casually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many seeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus some explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as bind, the female of the flag; flag, the male of the bind: sometimes easier words are changed into harder, as burial into sepulture or interment, drier into desiccative, dryness into ficcidity or aridity, fit into paroxysm; for the easiest word, whatever it be, can never be translated into one more easy. But easiness and difficulty are merely relative, and if the present prevalence of our language gauge should invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be assisted by those words which now seem only to encrease or produce obscurity. For this reason I have endeavoured frequently to join Teutonic and Roman interpretation, as to cheer to gladden, or exhilarate, that every learner of English may be assisted by his own tongue.

The solution of all difficulties, and the supply of all defects, must be sought in the examples, subjoined to the various senses of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authors.

When first I collected these authorities, I was desirous that every quotation should be useful to some other end than the illustration of a word; I therefore extracted from philosophers principles of science; from historians remarkable facts; from chymists complete processes; from divines striking exhortations; and from poets beautiful descriptions. Such is design, while it is yet at a distance from execution. When the time called upon me to range this accumulation of elegance and wisdom into an alphabetical series, I soon discovered that the bulk of my volumes would fright away the student, and was forced to depart from my scheme of including all that was pleasing or useful in English literature, and reduce my transcripts very often to clusters of words, in which scarcely any meaning is retained; thus to the weariness of copying, I was condemned to add the vexation of expunging. Some passages I have yet spared, which may relieve the labour of verbal searches, and interperse with verdure and flowers the dusty deserts of barren philosophy.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be considered as conveying the sentiments or doctrine of their authors; the word for the sake of which they are inserted, with all its appendant clauses, has been carefully preserved; but it may sometimes happen, by hasty detraction, that the general tendency of the sentence may be changed: the divine may desert his tenets, or the philosopher his system.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as masters of elegance or models of stile; but words must be sought where they are used; and in what pages, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found? Many quotations serve no other purpose, than that of proving the bare existence of words, and are therefore selected with less scrupulousness than those which are to teach their structures and relations.

My purpose was to admit no testimony of living authors, that I might not be misled by partiality, and that none of my contemporaries might have reason to complain; nor have I departed from this resolution, but when some performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory supplied me, from late books, with an example that was wanting, or when my heart in the tenderness of friendship, solicited admission for a favourite name.

So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have studiously endeavoured to collect examples and authorities from the writers before the reformation, whose works I regard as the wells of English undefiled, as the pure sources of genuine diction. Our language, for almost a century, has, by the concurrence of many causes, been gradually departing from its original Teutonic character, and deviating towards a Gallick structure and phraseology, from which it ought to be our endeavour to recal it, by making our ancient volumes the ground-work of stile, admitting among the additions of later times, only such as may supply real deficiencies; such are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate easily with our native idioms.

But as every language has a time of rudeness antecedent to perfection, as well as of stile refinement and declension, I have been cautious lest my zeal for antiquity

quity might drive me into times too remote, and croud my book with words now no longer understood. I have fixed Sidney's work for the boundary, beyond which I make few excursions. From the authors which rose in the time of Elizabeth, a speech might be formed adequate to all the purposes of use and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the translation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge from Bacon; the phrases of policy, war, and navigation from Raleigh; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Spenser and Sidney; and the diction of common life from Shakespeare, few ideas would be lost to mankind, for want of English words, in which they might be expressed.

It is not sufficient that a word is found, unless it be so combined as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the sentence; such passages I have therefore chosen, and when it happened that any author gave a definition of a term, or such an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a supplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwise observed.

Some words, indeed, stand unsupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns or adverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and constant analogy, or names of things seldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reason to doubt their existence.

There is more danger of censure from the multiplicity than paucity of examples; authorities will sometimes seem to have been accumulated without necessity or use, and perhaps some will be found, which might, without loss, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not hastily to be charged with superfluities: those quotations which to careless or unskilful perusers appear only to repeat the same sense, will often exhibit, to a more accurate examiner, diversities of signification, or, at least, afford different shades of the same meaning: one will shew the word applied to persons, another to things; one will express an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral sense; one will prove the expression genuine from an ancient author; another will shew it elegant from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit; an ambiguous sentence is ascertained by a passage clear and determinate; the word, how often soever repeated, appears with new associates and in different combinations, and every quotation contributes something to the stability or enlargement of the language.

When words are used equivocally, I receive them in either sense; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptation.

I have sometimes, though rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of sentiments, by shewing how one author copied the thoughts and diction of another: such quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might justly be censured, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual history.

The various syntactical structures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted; the licence or negligence with which many words have been hitherto used, has made our stile capricious and indeterminate; when the different combinations of the same word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, and I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus I have laboured to settle the orthography, display the analogy, regulate the structure, and ascertain the signification of English words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer: but I have not always executed my own scheme, or satisfied my own expectation. The work, whatever proofs of diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements: the orthography which I recommend is still controvertible, the etymology which I adopt

adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous ; the explanations are sometimes too much contracted, and sometimes too much diffused, the significations are distinguished rather with subtilty than skill, and the attention is harassed with unnecessary minuteness.

The examples are too often injudiciously truncated, and perhaps sometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a mistaken sense ; for in making this collection I trusted more to memory, than, in a state of disquiet and embarrassment, memory can contain, and purposed to supply at the review what was left incomplete in the first transcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though necessary and significant, are undoubtedly omitted ; and of the words most studiously considered and exemplified, many senses have escaped observation.

Yet these failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprize is above the strength that undertakes it : To rest below his own aim is incident to every one whose fancy is active, and whose views are comprehensive ; nor is any man satisfied with himself because he has done much, but because he can conceive little. When first I engaged in this work, I resolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and pleased myself with a prospect of the hours which I should reel away in feasts of literature, the obscure recesses of northern learning which I should enter and ransack, the treasures with which I expected every search into those neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I should display my acquisitions to mankind. When I thus enquired into the original of words, I resolved to show likewise my attention to things ; to pierce deep into every science, to enquire the nature of every substance of which I inserted the name, to limit every idea by a definition strictly logical, and exhibit every production of art or nature in an accurate description, that my book might be in place of all other dictionaries whether appellative or technical. But these were the dreams of a poet doomed at last to wake a lexicographer. I soon found that it is too late to look for instruments, when the work calls for execution, and that whatever abilities I had brought to my task, with those I must finally perform it. To deliberate whenever I doubted, to enquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end, and, perhaps, without much improvement ; for I did not find by my first experiments, that what I had not of my own was easily to be obtained : I saw that one enquiry only gave occasion to another, that book referred to book, that to search was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed ; and that thus to pursue perfection, was, like the first inhabitants of Arcadia, to chase the sun, which, when they had reached the hill where he seemed to rest, was still beheld at the same distance from them.

I then contracted my design, determining to confide in myself, and no longer to solicit auxiliaries, which produced more incumbrance than assistance : by this I obtained at least one advantage, that I set limits to my work, which would in time be finished, though not completed.

Despondency has never so far prevailed as to depress me to negligence ; some faults will at least appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and persevering activity. The nice and subtle ramifications of meaning were not easily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and convinced of the necessity of disentangling combinations, and separating similitudes. Many of the distinctions which to common readers appear useless and idle, will be found real and important by men versed in the school philosophy, without which no dictionary ever shall be accurately compiled, or skillfully examined.

Some senses however there are, which, though not the same, are yet so nearly allied, allied, that they are often confounded. Most men think indistinctly, and therefore cannot speak with exactness; and consequently some examples might be indifferently put to either signification: this uncertainty is not to be imputed to me, who do not form, but register the language; who do not teach men how they should think, but relate how they have hitherto expressed their thoughts.

The imperfect sense of some examples I lamented, but could not remedy, and hope they will be compensated by innumerable passages selected with propriety, and preserved with exactness; some shining with sparks of imagination, and some replete with treasures of wisdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but because care will not always be successful, and recollection or information come too late for use.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, must be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable. I could not visit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my skill in the dialect of navigation, nor visit the warehouses of merchants, and shops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools, operations, of which no mention is found in books; what favourable accident, or enquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected; but it had been a hopeless labour to glean up words, by courting living information, and contesting with the sullenness of one, and the roughness of another.

To furnish the academicians della Crusca with words of this kind, a series of comedies called la Fiera, or the Fair, was professedly written by Buonaroti; but I had no such assistant, and therefore was content to want what they must have wanted likewise, had they not luckily been so supplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omissions. Of the laborious and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great measure casual and mutable; many of their terms are formed for some temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a state of increase or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore must be suffered to perish with other things unworthy of preservation.

Care will sometimes betray to the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which seldom occur, will suffer those to pass by unregarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is searching for rare and remote things, will neglect those that are obvious and familiar: thus many of the most common and cursory words have been inserted with little illustration, because in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy those which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified.

Thus it happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things easy from confidence; the mind, afraid of greatness, and disdainful of littleness, hastily withdraws herself from painful searches, and passes with scornful rapidity over tasks not adequate to her powers, sometimes too secure for caution, and again too anxious of vigorous effort; sometimes idle in a plain path, and sometimes distracted in labyrinths, and dissipated by different intentions.

A large work is difficult because it is large, even though all its parts might singly be performed with facility; where there are many things to be done, each must be allowed its share of time and labour, in the proportion only which it bears to the whole; nor can it be expected, that the stones which form the dome of a temple, should be squared and polished like the diamond of a ring.

Of the event of this work, for which, having laboured it with so much application,

erion, I cannot but have some degree of parental fondness, it is natural to form conjectures. Those who have been persuaded to think well of my design, require that it should fix our language, and put a stop to those alterations which time and chance have hitherto been suffered to make in it without opposition. With this consequence I will confess that I flattered myself for a while; but now begin to fear that I have indulged expectation which neither reason nor experience can justify. When we see men grow old and die at a certain time one after another, from century to century, we laugh at the elixir that promises to prolong life to a thousand years, and with equal justice may the lexicographer be derided, who being able to produce no example of a nation that has preserved their words and phrases from mutability, shall imagine that his dictionary can embalm his language, and secure it from corruption and decay, that it is in his power to change sublunary nature, or clear the world at once from folly, vanity, and affectation.

With this hope, however, academies have been instituted, to guard the avenues of their languages, to retain fugitives, and repulse intruders; but their vigilance and activity have hitherto been vain; sounds are too volatile and subtle for legal restraints; to enchain syllables, and to lash the wind, are equally the undertakings of pride, unwilling to measure its desires by its strength. The French language has visibly changed under the inspection of the academy; the style of Anclet's translation of father Paul is observed by Le Courayer to be un peu passé; and no Italian will maintain, that the diction of any modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Boccace, Machiavel, or Caro.

Total and sudden transformations of a language seldom happen; conquests and migrations are now very rare: but there are other causes of change, which, though slow in their operation, and invisible in their progress, are perhaps as much superior to human resistance, as the revolutions of the sky, or intumescence of the tide. Commerce, however necessary, however lucrative, as it depraves the manners, corrupts the language; they that have frequent intercourse with strangers, to whom they endeavour to accommodate themselves, must in time learn a mingled dialect, like the jargon which serves the traffickers on the Mediterranean and Indian coasts. This will not always be confined to the exchange; the warehouse, or the port, but will be communicated by degrees to other ranks of the people, and be at last incorporated with the current speech.

There are likewise internal causes equally forcible. The language most likely to continue long without alteration, would be that of a nation raised a little, and but a little, above barbarity, secluded from strangers, and totally employed in procuring the conveniences of life; either without books, or, like some of the Mahometan countries, with very few: men thus busied and unlearned, having only such words as common use requires, would perhaps long continue to express the same notions by the same signs. But no such constancy can be expected in a people polished by arts, and classed by subordination, where one part of the community is sustained and accommodated by the labour of the other. Those who have much leisure to think, will always be enlarging the stock of ideas, and every increase of knowledge, whether real or fancied, will produce new words, or combination of words. When the mind is unchained from necessity, it will range after convenience; when it is left at large in the fields of speculation, it will shift opinions; as any custom is disused, the words that expressed it must perish with it; as any opinion grows popular, it will innovate speech in the same proportion as it alters practice.

As by the cultivation of various sciences, a language is amplified, it will be more furnished with words deflected from their original sense; the geometrician will talk of a courtier's zenith, or the excentrick virtue of a wild hero, and the physician physician of sanguine expectations and phlegmatick delays. Copiousness of speech will give opportunities to capricious choice, by which some words will be preferred and others degraded; vicissitudes of fashion will enforce the use of new, or extend the signification of known terms. The tropes of poetry will make hourly encroachments, and the metaphorical will become the current sense: pronunciation will be varied by levity or ignorance, and the pen must at length comply with the tongue; illiterate writers will at one time or other, by publick insatiation, rise into renown, who, not knowing the original import of words, will use them with colloquial licentiousness, confound distinction, and forget propriety. As politeness increases, some expressions will be considered as too gross and vulgar for the delicate, others as too formal and ceremonious for the gay and airy; new phrases are therefore adopted, which must for the same reasons, be in time dismissed. Swift, in his petty treatise on the English language, allows that new words must sometimes be introduced, but proposed that none should be suffered to become obsolete. But what makes a word obsolete more than general agreement to forbear it? and how shall it be continued, when it conveys an offensive idea, or recalled again into the mouths of mankind, when it has once by disuse become unfamiliar, and by unfamiliarity displeasing.

There is another cause of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the present state of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a third distinct from both, and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the most conspicuous accomplishment, is skill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has long cultivated another language will find its words and combinations croud upon his memory; and haste and negligence, refinement and affectation, will obtrude borrowed terms and exotic expressions.

The great pest of speech is frequency of translation. No book was ever turned from one language into another, without imparting something of its native idiom; this is the most mischievous and comprehensive innovation; single words may enter by thousands, and the fabrick of the tongue continue the same, but new phraseology changes much at once; it alters not the single stones of the building, but the order of the Columns. If an academy should be established for the cultivation of our stile, which I, who can never wish to see dependance multiplied, hope the spirit of English liberty will hinder or destroy, let them, instead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, endeavour, with all their influence, to stop the licence of translators, whose idleness and ignorance, if it be suffered to proceed, will reduce us to babble a dialect of France.

If the changes that we fear be thus irresistible, what remains but to acquiesce with silence, as in the other insurmountable distresses of humanity? it remains that we retard what we cannot repel, that we palliate what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthened by care, though death cannot be ultimately defeated: tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration; we have long preserved our constitution, let us make some struggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of philology to the nations of the continent. The chief glory of every people arises from its authors: whether I shall add any thing by my own writing to the reputation of English literature, must be left to time: much of my life has been lost under the pressures of disease; much has been trifled away; and much has always been spent in provision for the day that was passing over me: but I shall not think my employment useless or ignoble, if by my assistance foreign nations, and distant ages, gain access to the propagators of knowledge, and understand the teachers of truth; if my labours afford afford light to the repositories of science, and add celebrity to Bacon, to Hooker, to Milton and to Boyle.

When I am animated by this wish, I look with pleasure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the spirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will immediately become popular I have not promised to myself: a few wild blunders, and risible absurdities, from which no work of such multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furnish folly with laughter, and harden ignorance into contempt; but useful diligence will at last prevail, and there never can be wanting some who distinguish desert; who will consider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, since while it is hastening to publication, some words are budding, and some falling away; that a whole life cannot be spent upon syntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be sufficient; that he, whose design includes whatever language can express, must often speak of what he does not understand; that a writer will sometimes be hurried by eagerness to the end, and sometimes faint with weariness under a task, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mine; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always present; that sudden fits of inadvertency will surprize vigilance, slight avocations will seduce attention, and casual eclipses of the mind will darken learning; and that the writer shall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yesterday he knew with intuitive readiness, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morrow.

In this work, when it shall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewise is performed; and though no book was ever spared out of tenderness to the author, and the world is little solicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns; yet it may gratify curiosity to inform it, that the English Dictionary was written with little assistance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great; not in the soft obscurities of retirement, or under the shelter of academick bowers, but amidst inconvenience and distraction, in sickness and in sorrow: and it may repress the triumph of malignant criticism to observe, that if our language is not here fully displayed, I have only failed in an attempt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and comprised in a few volumes, be yet, after the toil of successive ages, inadequate and delusive; if the aggregated knowledge, and co-operating diligence of the Italian academicians, did not secure them from the censure of Beni; if the embodied criticks of France, when fifty years had been spent upon their work, were obliged to change its oeconomy, and give their second edition another form, I may surely be contented without the praise of perfection, which if I could obtain, in this gloom of solitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till most of those whom I wished to please, have sunk into the grave, and success and miscarriage are empty sounds: I therefore dismiss it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from censure or from praise.

THE HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THOUGH the Britains or Welsh were the first possessors of this island, whose names are recorded, and are therefore in civil history always considered as the predecessors of the present inhabitants; yet the deduction of the English language from the earliest times of which we have any knowledge to its present state, requires no mention of them. for we have so few words, which can, with any probability be referred to British roots, that we justly regard the Saxons and Welsh, as nations totally distinct. It has been conjectured, that when the Saxons seized this country, they suffered the Britains to live among them in a state of vassalage, employed in the culture of the ground, and other laborious and ignoble services. But it is scarcely possible, that a nation, however depressed, should have been mixed in considerable numbers with the Saxons without some communication of their tongue, and therefore it may, with great reason, be imagined, that those, who were not sheltered in the mountains, perished by the sword.

The whole fabrick and scheme of the English language is Gothick or Teutonic: it is a dialect of that tongue, which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except those where the Slavonian is spoken. Of these languages Dr. Hickes thus exhibited the genealogy.

Of the Gothick, the only monument remaining is a copy of the gospels somewhat mutilated, which, from the silver with which the characters are adorned, is called the silver book. It is now preserved at Upsal, and has been twice published. Whether the dialect of this venerable manuscript be purely Gothick, has been doubted; it seems however to exhibit the most ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonic race, and the Saxon, which is the original of the present English, was either derived from it, or both descended from some common parent.

What was the form of the Saxon language when, about the year 450, they first entered Britain, cannot now be known. They seem to have been a people without learning, and very probably without an alphabet; their speech therefore, having been always cursory and extemporaneous, must have been artless and unconnected, without any modes of transition or involution of clauses; which abruptness and inconnection may be observed even in their later writings. This barbarity may be supposed to have continued during their wars with the Britains, which for a time left them no leisure for softer studies; nor is there any reason for supposing it abated, till the year 570, when Augustine came from Rome to convert them to Christianity. The Christian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning; they then became by degrees acquainted with the Roman language, and so gained, from time to time, some knowledge and elegance, till in three centuries they had formed a language capable of expressing all the sentiments of a civilised people, as appears by king Alfred's paraphrase or imitation of Boetius, and his short preface, which I have selected as the first specimen of ancient English.

convenience, that the same book, being translated in different ages, affords opportunity of making the gradations of change, and bringing one age in comparison with another. For this purpose I have placed the Saxon version and that of Wicliffe, written about the year 1380, in opposite columns; because the convenience of easy collation seems greater than that of regular chronology.

3 And thei hadden no child, for Elizabeth was bareyn and bothe weren of greet oge in dayes.

4 And it biŷel that whanne Zacarye ŷchoo do the office of preŷthod in the ordir of his cou to fore God.

5 Aftir the cuŷtom of the preŷthod, he we forth by lot and entride into the temple to cenŷen.

6 And at the multitude of the puple without forth and preyede in the hour of cenŷing.

7 And an aungel of the Lord aƷperide him : and ŷtood on the riȝt half of the auter cenŷe.

8 And Zacarye ŷeynge was aŷrayed : and dre fel upon him.

9 And the aungel ŷayde to him, Zacarye dre thou not : for thy preier is herd, and Elizabeth thi wiŷ ŷhal bere to thee a ŷone : and his na ŷhal be clepid Jon.

10 And joye and gladyng ŷhal be to thei and manƷe ŷchulen have joye in his natyvyte.

11 For he ŷhal be great before the Lord and he ŷhal not drinke wyn ne ŷydr, and ŷhal be fulŷild with the holy goŷt yit of his mo d r wombe.

12 And he ŷhal conŷert manƷe of the chi dren of Iŷrael to her Lord God.

13 And he ŷhal go before in the ŷpiȝte aŷ vertu of Helye : and he ŷhal turne the heart of the fadris to the ŷonis, and men out of be lieve : to the prudene of juŷt men, to make r dy to prefer puple to the Lord.

14 And Zacarye ŷeyde to the aungel : when of ŷchal Y wyte this ? for Y am old : and m wyf hað gon fer in hir dayes.

15 And the aŷgel aŷwerde and ŷeyde to him, for Y am Gabriel that ŷtonde nyȝ before God, and Y am ŷent to thee to ŷpeke and to eŷangelife to thee theŷe thingis, and lo thou ŷha be dounbe.

16 And thou ŷhaŷt not mowe ŷpeke, til in the day in which theŷe thingis ŷchulen be do for thou haŷt not beleeved my to wordis, which ŷchulen be fulŷild in her tyme.

17 And the puple was abidyng e Zacarye : aŷ thei wondriden that he taryede in the temple.

18 And he gede out and myȝhte not ŷpeke to hem : and thei knewen that he hadde ŷeyn wiŷoun in the temple, and he bekenide to hem and he dwellide ŷille dounbe.

19 And it was don whanne the days of hi office weren fulŷillid : he wente into his houŷ.

20 And aŷtir theŷe dayes Elizabeth hiŷ w conŷeyvede and hidde hir ŷyve monethis an kyde.

21 For ŷo the Lorde dide to me in the daye in which he biheld to take away my reƷroŷ among men.

22 But in the ŷixte monethe the aungel Gabriel was ŷent from God : into a cytee of Galilee whos name was Nazareth.

30 And Marye seyde to the angel, on what maner schal this thing be don? for Y knowe not man.

31 And the angel answered and seyde to hir, the holy Gost schal come fro above into thee: and the vertu of the higheste schal ouer shadowe thee: and therefore that holy thing that schal be borun of thee: schal be clepide the sone of God.

32 And to Elizabeth thi cofyn, and ſche alſo

aungel departide fro hir.

35 And Marye roos up in tho dayes and wente with haste into the mountaynes into a citee of Iudee.

36 And sche entride into the hous of Zaccarye and grette Elizabeth.

37. And it was don as Elizabeth herde the salutation of Marye the young childe in hir wombe gladiide, and Elizabeth was fulfilled with the holy Gost.

38 And cryede with a gret voice and seyde, bleffid be thou among wymmen and bleffid be the fruyt of thy wombe.

39 And wherof is this thing to me, that the

About the year 1150, the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the present English may be plainly discovered; this change seems not to have been the effect of the Norman conquest, for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the first hundred years after it; the language must therefore have been altered by causes like those which, notwithstanding the care of writers and societies instituted to obviate them, are even now daily making innovations in every living language. I have exhibited a specimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle, of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates.

Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry ſeems to have been written, of which I have inſerted only ſhort fragments; the firſt is a rude attempt at the preſent meaſure of eight ſyllables, and the ſecond is a natural introduction to Robert of Glouceſter, being compoſed in the ſame meaſure, which, however rude and barbarous it may ſeem, taught the way to the Alexandrines of the French poetry.

In theſe fragments, the adulteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not ſo much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes of its own forms and terminations: for which no reaſon can be given.

Hitherto the language uſed in this iſland, however different in ſucceſſive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be aſſigned when the Saxon may be ſaid to ceaſe, and the Engliſh to commence. Robert of Glouceſter however, who is placed by the criticks in the thirteenth century, ſeems to have uſed a kind of intermediate diſtion, neither Saxon nor Engliſh; in his work therefore we ſee the tranſition exhibited, and, as he is the firſt of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extenſive quotation is extraded. He writes apparently in the ſame meaſure with the foregoing author of St. Margarete, which poliſhed into greater exactneſs, appeared

Sir John Mandeville wrote, as he himself informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which comprising a relation of many different particulars, consequently required the use of many words and phrases, may be properly specified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have chosen the first, because it shows, in some measure the state of European science as well as of the English tongue; and the second, because it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expression.

IN that lond, ne in many othere bezonde that, no man may see the sterre transmontayne, that is clept the sterre of the see, that is unmeuablc, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode sterre. But men seep another sterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the Southe, that is clept Antartyk. And right as the schip men taken here auys here, and gouerne hem be the lode sterre, right so don schip men bezonde the parties, be the sterre of the Southe, the which sterre apperethe not to us. And this sterre, that is toward the Northe, that wee clepen the lode sterre, ne apperethe not to hem. For whiche cause, men may wel perceyue, that the lond and the see ben of rownde scapp and forme. For the partie of the firmament scheweithe in o contree, that scheweithe not in another contree. And men may well preuen be experience and sotyle compassment of wytt, that zif a man fond passages be schippes, that wolde go to serchen the world, men myghte go be schippe alle aboute the world, and aboven and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, afre that I have seyn. For, I have been to-ward the parties of Braban, and beholden the Astrolabre, that the sterre that is clept the transmontayne, is 53 degrees highe. And more forthere in Almayne and Bewne, it hathe

hathe 58 degrees. And more forthe toward the parties septentrionales, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certyn mynutes. For I my self have mesured it by the Astrolabre. Now schulle ze knowe, that azen the Transmontayne, is the tother sterre, that is clept Antartyk; as I have seyd befoore. And tho 2 sterres ne meven nevere. And he him turnethe alle the firmament, righte as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tree; so that tho sterres benen the firmament in 2 egalle parties; so that it hath als mochel aboven, as it hathe benethen. Aftre this, I have gon toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the Southe: and I have founden that in Lybye, men seen first the sterre Antartyk. And so fer I have gon more in tho contrees, that I have founde that sterre more highe; so that toward the highe Lybye, it is 18 degrees in heghte, and certeyn minutes (of the whiche, 60 minutes maken a degree) aftre goynge be see and be londe, toward this contree, of that I have spoke, and to other yles and londs bezonde that contree, I have founden the sterre Antartyk of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And zif I hadde had companye and schippyng, for to go more bezonde, I trowe well in certyn, that wee scholde have seen alle the roundnesse of the firmament alle about. For as I have seyd zou be fora, the half of the firmament is betwene tho 2 sterres: the whiche halfondelle I have seyn. And of the tother halfondelle, I have seyn toward the Northe, undre the Transmontayne 62 degrees and 10 mynutes; and toward the partie meridionale, I have seen undre the Antartyk 33 degrees and 16 mynutes: and thanne the halfondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180, I have seen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that other part, that ben 95 degrees, and nighe the halfondelle of a degree; and so there ne saylethe but that I have seen alle the firmament, saf 84 degrees and the halfondelle of a degree; and that is not the fourth part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundnesse of the firmament holt 90 degrees: so there saylethe but 5 degrees and an half, of the fourthe partie. And also I have seen the 3 parties of alle the roundnesse of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I seye zou certainly, that men may envirowne alle the erthe of all the world, as well undre as aboven, and turnen azen to his contree, that hadde companye and schippyng and conduyt: and alle weyes he scholde fynde men, londes, and yles, als wel as in this countree. For zee wyten welle, that thei that ben toward the Antartyk, thei ben streghte, feet azen teet of hem, that dwellen undre the transmontayne; als wel as wee and thei that dwellen under us, ben feet azen teet. For alle the parties of see and of lond han here appoyntees, habitables or trepassibles, and thei of this hal, and bezond hal. And wyttethe wel, that aftre that, that I may parceyve and comprehend the loades of Preftre John, emperours of Ynde ben under us. For in goynge from Scotlond or from Englond toward Jerusalem, men gon upward always. For our load is in the lowe partie of the erthe toward the West: and the lond of Preftre John is the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Est: and they han there the day, when we have the nyghte, and also highe to the contrarie, thei han the nyghte, when we han the day. For the erthe and the see ben of round forme and schapp, as I have seyd befoore. And that men gon upward to a cost, men gon downward to another cost. Also zee have herd me seye, that Jerusalem is in the myddes of the world; and that may men preven and schewen there, be a sære, that is pighte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, when it is equenoxium, that schewethe no schadwe on no syde. And that it scholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wytnesse the it in the Psautre, where he seythe, Deus operatus est saluie in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten for the parties of the West, for to go toward Jerusalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon fro Jerusalem, unto other confynes of the superficialitie of the erthe bezonde. And whan man men gon bezonde the iourneyes, towarde Ynde and the forynn yles, alle is envyrnyng the roundnesse of the erthe and of the see, undre oure contrees on this half. And therefore hath it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd countyd, whan I was zong; how a worthi man departed sometye from our contrees, for to go serche the world. And so he passed Ynde, and the yles bezonde Ynde, where ben mo than 5000 yles: and so longe he wente he see and lond, and so envyround the world be many seysons, that he fond an yle, where he herde speke his owne language, callynge on oxen in the plowghe, suche wordes as men spoken to bestes in his own contree: whereof he hadde gret mervayle: for he knew not how it myghte be. But I seye, that he had gon so longe, be londe and be see, that he had envyround all the erthe, that he was comen azen envyrounyng, that is to seye, goynge aboute, unto his own marches, zif he wolde have passed forthe, till he had founden his contree and his owne knouleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whence he was come fro; and so he loften moche peynefulle labour, as him self seythe, a great while aftre, that he was comen hom. For it befelle aftre, that he went in to Norweye; and there tempest of the see toke him; and he arryved in an yle; and when he was in that yle, he knew wel, that it was the yle, where he had herd speke his own language befoore, and the callynge of the oxen at the plowghe: and that was possible thinge. But how it seme the to symple men unlearned, that men ne mowe not go undre the erthe, and also that men scholde

NOWE for to speke of the commune.
 It is to drede of that fortune,
 Which hath beaile in sondry londes;
 But ofte for defaute of bondes
 Allfodeialy, er it be wist,
 A tunne, whan his lie arist
 Tobreketh, and renneth all aboute,
 Whiche els shulde nought gone out.
 And eke full ofte a litel skare
 Vpon a barke, er men be ware,
 Let in the streme, whiche with gret peine,
 If any man it shall restraine.
 Where lawe failleth, errur groweth.
 He is not wise, who that ne troweth
 For it hath proved oft er this.
 And thus the common clamour is
 In every londe, where people dwelleth:
 And eche in his complainte telleth,
 How that the worlde is miswent,
 And thervpon his argument
 Yeueth every man in sondry wise:
 But what man wolde him self auise
 His conscience, and nought misule,
 He maie well at the first excule
 His god, whiche euer stant in one,
 In him there is delaute none
 So must it stande vpon vs kelue,
 Nought only vpon ten ne twelue,
 But plenary vpon vs all
 For man is cause of that shall fall.

The history of our language is now brought to the point at which the history of our poetry is generally supposed to commence, the time of the illustrious Geoffrey Chaucer, who may perhaps, with great justice, be styled the first of our versifiers who wrote poetically. He does not however appear to have deserved all the praise which he has received, or all the censure that he has suffered. Dryden, who mistakes genius for learning, and in confidence of his abilities, ventured to write of what he had not examined, ascribes to Chaucer the first refinement of our numbers, the first production of easy and natural rhymes, and the improvement of our language, by words borrowed from the more polished languages of the continent. Skinner contrarily blames him in harsh terms for having vitiated his native speech by whole carloads of foreign words. But he that reads the works of Gower, will find smooth numbers and easy rhymes, of which Chaucer is supposed to have been the inventor, and the French words, whether good or bad, of which Chaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does allow us to discover with particular exactness; but the works of Gower and Lydgate sufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries: and some improvements he undoubtedly made by the various dispositions of his rhymes, and by the mixture of different numbers, in which he seems to have been happy and judicious. I have selected several specimens both of his prose and verse; and among them, part of his translation of Boetius, to which another version, made in the time of queen Mary, is opposed. It would be improper to quote very sparingly an author of so much reputation, or to make very large extracts from a book so generally known.

ALAS! I wepyng am constrained to begin verse of sorrowfull matter, that whilom in of my youth whilom wellfall and grene, comforten now sorrowfull wiesdes of me olde man:

 for elde is comen unwarely upon me, hasted by the harmes that I have, and sorowe hath commanded his age to be in me. Heres hore area often icleped: Alas! alas! with how dese an erd deth cruell turneth awaie fro wretches, and naieth for to close wepyng eyes. While fortune unfaithfull favoured me with light godes, that sorrowful house, that is to saie, the deth, had almost drete myne hedde: but now for fortune

 ouerthrowen in aduersitie, am compelled to sele and tast heuines and grief. Beholde the muses Poeticall, that is to seie: the pleasure that is in poesies verses, do appoynt me, and compell me to write these verses, in meter, and the sorrowfull verses do wet my wretched face with very waterye teares, yssuinge out of my eyes for sorowe. Whiche muses no feare without doute could overcome, but that they wold folow me in my journey of exile or banishment. Sometye the ioie of happy and lusty delectable youth dyd comfort me, and now the course of sorrowfull olde age causeth me to reioyse. For hasty old age valoked for is come vpon me with al her incommodities and

rowe. Manne's death is happy, that cometh not in youth when a man is lustye, and in pleasure or welth: but in time of aduersitie, when it is often desired. Alas Alas howe dull and desse be the eares of cruel death vnto men in misery that would fayne dye: and yet refuſeth to come and shutte vp theyr carefull wepyng eyes. Whiles that false fortune fauoryd me with her transitorye graces, then the howre of death had almost overcome me. That is to say deathe was redy to oppresse me when I was in prosperite. Nowe for by cause that fortune beyng turned, from prosperite into aduersitie (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaungyd her deceytable countenance, my wretched life is yet prolonged and I continue in dolour. O my frendes why haue you so often boasted me, sayinge that I was happy when I had honour, possessions riches, and abundance whych be transitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no stedfast degre.

IN the meane while, that I still record these thynges with my self, and marked my wepelic complaine with office of poindrell; I laugh standinge aboue the hight of myn hed a woman of full grete reverence, by semblaunt. Her eyen twinkling, and clere, seyinge over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with soche rigour and strength that it ne might not be compassed, all were it so, that she were full of so grete age, that menne woulde not trowen in no manere, that she were of our elde.

The stature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for sometyme she constrained and thronke her klyves, like to the common mesure of menne: And sometyme it seemed, that she touched the beven with the hight of her hedde. And when she bore her hedde higher, she perced the self beven, so that the sighte of menne loking was in ydell: her clothes wer masked of right delie thredes, and subtil craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes she had woven with her owne handes, as I knowe well after by her self declaring, and shewing to me the beautie: The whiche clothes a darknesse of a foretlen and clipped elde had dusked and darked, as it is come to darke by smoked Images.

In the netherest hemme and border of these clothes menne redde i woven therein a Greke like A. that signifieth the life active, and aboue that letter in the hieft bordure, a Greke like C. that signifieth the life contemplative. And betwene these two letters there were sene degrees nobly wrought, in manner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the netherest letter to the upperest: nathelesse handes of some man hadde kerve that clothe, by violence or by strength, and the hygher parte wher the letter T. was which is vnderstand speculation or contemplation. Neuertheles the handes of some vyolent persones had cut the sayde vestures and had taken awaye certayne pecis thereof, such as varye one coulede catch. And she her selfe dyd bare in her ryght hand liel bokes, and in her lefte hande a scepter, which foresayd phylosophy (when she saw the muses poetical present at my bed, cloudie hath chaunged her decevable chere to meweard, myne unpitious life draweth along ungreable dwelllynges. O ye my frendes, what, or whereto avainted ye me to ben wellfull? For he that hath fallen, stode in no stedfast degre.

WHYLES that I considerydde prynvlye with my selfe the thynges before sayd, and descrybed my wofull complaine a ter me maner and office of a wrytter, me thought I sawe a woman stand ouer my head of a reuerend countenance, hauyng quicke and glisteryng clere eyes, aboue the common sorte of men in lyuely and delectable coloure, and ful of strength, although she seemed so olde that by no meanes she is thought to be one of this oure tyme, her stature is of doutful knowledge, for nowe she sheweth herselfe at the common length or stature of men, and other whiles she seemeth so high, as though she touched heuen with the crown of her hed. And when she wold stretch fourth her hed hygher, it also perced thorough heauen, so that mens syghte coulde not attain to behold her. Her vestures or cloths were perfy of the finyste thredes, and subtyll workmansshyp, and of substance permanent, whych vestures she had woven with her own handes as I perceyued after by her owne sayinge. The kynde or bewtye of the whyche vestures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignorance of oldenes forgotten hadde obscured and darkened, as the smoke is wont to darken Images that stand nyghe the smoke. In the lower parte of the said vestures was read the greke letter P. woven whych signifieth practise or actyffe, and in the hygher part of the vestures the greke letter. T. whych estandeth for theoria, that signifieth speculation or contemplation. And betwene both the sayd letters were sene certayne degrees, wrought after the manner of ladders wherein was as it were a passage or waye in steppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter. P. was which is vnderstand from practyse or actyff, unto everiche manne of hem had borne awaie soche peces, as he might getten. And forsothe this foresaid woman bare inale bokes in her righte hande, and in her lefte hand she bare a scepter. And when she sawe these Poeticall muses appochyng about my bed, and endityng wordes to my wepynges, she was a little amoved, and glowed with cruell eyen. Who (quod she) hath suffered approchen to this like manne these commen stompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne asswage not his sorowes with remedies, but thei would seden and norishe hym with sweete venime? Forsothe, that ben tho that with thornes, and prickynges of talentes of afflictions, whiche that ben nothyng fructuous nor profitable, distroien the Corne, plentuous of fruides of reson. For thei holden hertes of men in usage, but thei ne deliver no folke fro maladie. But if ye muses had withdrawn from me with your flatteries any unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wont to finde commonly among the peple, I would well suffre the lasse grevously. For why, in soche an unprofitable man myne ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrawn from me this man, that hath ben nourished in my studies or scoles of Eleaticis, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Merm maidens, whiche that ben swete, till it be at the last, and suffreth this man to be cured and heled by my muses, that is to say, by my notetull sciences. And thus this companie of muses blamed casten wrothly the chere downward to the yerth, and shewing by rednesse ther shame, thei passeden sorowfully the threshold. And I of whom the sight plounged in teres was darked, so that I ne might not know what that woman was, of so Imperial authoritie, I woxe all abashed and stoned, and cast my sight doune to the yerth, and began still for to abide what the wold doon afterward. Then came she nere, and let here doune upon the uttermost corner of my bed, and she beholding my chere, that was cast to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with these wordes (that I shall saine) the perturbacion of my thought.

bed, spekyng sorrowful wordes to my wepynges, beyng angry sayd (with terrible or frowning countenance) who suffred these crafty harlotte to com to thys sycke man? whych can help hym by no means of hys griefe by any kind of medicines, but rather increafe the same with sweete poyson. These be they that doo dystroye the fertile and plentuous commodities of reason and the fruyter thereof wyth their prickynge thornes. or barren affectes, and accustomen or subdue mens myndes with sickenes, and heynenes, and do not deluyen or heale them of the same. But yf your flatterye had conveyed or wythdrawen from me, any vnlernyd man as the comen sort of people are wonte to be, I coulde have ben better contentyd, for in that my worke should not be hurt or hynderyd. But you have taken and conveyed from me thys man that hath ben broughte vp in the studies of Aristotel and of Plato. But yet get you hence mairmaids (that seme swete untill you have broughte a man to deathe) and suffer me to heale thys my man wyth my muses or sciences that be hollome and good. And after that philosophy had spoken these wordes the sayd companie of the muses poetically beyng rebukyd and sad, caste down their countenance to the ground, and by blussing confessed their shamefastnes, and went out of the dores. But I (that had my sight dull and blynd wyth wepyng, so that I knew not what woman this haaving so great authoritie) was amafyd or astoned, and loking downward, towarde the ground, I began pryvyly to look what thyng the wold save ferther, than she had said. Then she approaching and drawyng nere unto me, sat doune vpon the uttermost part of my bed, and loking vpon my face sad with wepyng, and declenyng toward the earth for sorow, bewayled the trouble of my minde with these sayynges tolowynge.

The conclusions of the ASTROLABIE.

This book (written to his son in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) standeth so good at this day, especially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, says an Edit. of Chaucer.

LYTEL Lowys my sonne, I perceve well by certain evidences thyne abylyte to lerne sciences, touching nombres and proporcions, and also well consydre I thy belye prayer in especyal to lerne the trefte of the astrolabye. Than for as moche as a philosopher saith, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that consideyth to the ryghtull prayers of his frende: therefore I have given the a sufficient astrolabye for our orizont, compownded after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the which by mediation of this lytel trefte, I purpose to teche the a certain nombre of conclusions, pertainynge to this same instrument. I say a certaine nombre of conclusion: to thre causes, the first cause is this. Trulte wel that al the conclusions that have be founden, or ells possiblye might be founde in so noble an instrument as in the astrolabye, ben unknowen perfetly to anye mortal man in this region, as I suppose. Another cause is this, that sothly in any causes of the astrolabye that I have yfene, ther ben some conclusions, that wol not in al thynges perourme ther behettes: and some of hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceive. This trefte divided in five partes, wil I shewe the wondir light rules and naked worde in Englishe, for Latine ne canst thou nat yet but smile, my litel sonne. But neverthelesse sufficient to the these treve conclusions in Englishe, as well as sufficient to the noble clerkes grekes theise same conclusions in greke, and to the Arabixen in Araunke, and to Jews in Hebrew, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke these had them writte out of other diuers languages, and write them in their owne tongue, that is to say in Latine.

And God wote that in all these languages and in many moe, haue theire conclusions ben sufficiente learned and taught, and yet by diuers rules, that as diuers pathes leden diuers folke the right way to Rome.

Now wil I pray meekely every person discrete, that rede hitherto, or his liuyng treatise to haue the same entente, excused, and my superfluite of wordes, for two causes. The first cause is, that this curious enditing and hard sentences is to hevy at ones, for such a childe to lerne. And the seconde cause is this, that forhely me semeth better to written unto a child twise a gode sentence, than be foriete it ones. And, Lowis, if thou seest I shewe the in my lith Englishe, as new conclusions touching this matter, and not as an strewe but as many and subtil conclusions as ben shewed in latin, in any comon tretise of the astrolabie, conne me the more thanke, and praye God save the kinge, that is lorde of this message, and all that him faith bereth, and meekly everich in his degree, the more and the more. But cometh well, that I ne usurpe not to have founded this worke of my labour or of mine engin. I name but a leude compilatour in the labour of olde astrologiens, and have it translated in myn englishe onely for thy doctrine: and with this swerde shal I sene envy.

The first party.

The first partye of this tretise shal reherce the figures, and the membres of thine astrolabie, by the which thou shalt haue the greter knowinge of this owne instrument.

The seconde party.

The seconde partye shal teche the to werken the very practice of the foresaid conclusions, as by the which and altho narrowe as may be shewed in this instrument portatife aboute. For as we se every astrologien, that smallest fractione wo not be shewed in so smal an instrument, as in subtil tables calculated for a cause.

THE PROLOGUE OF THE TESTAMENT OF LOVE.

MANY men there ben, that with eres openly spread so moche swalowen the beautie of jestes and of ryme, by queint and strange coloures, that of the godenesse or of the badenesse of the sentence take they litel heede of the same.

Sucheyle duille witte and a thoughtfulle soule have ben mined and grassed in my spirites, that the craft of enditing wol nat ben of mine acquaintance. And for rude wordes and boistous termes the herte of the herer to the inrest point, and standen there the sentence of thinges, so that with litel helpe it is able to spring, this boke, that nothyng hath of the grete flode of wytte, no of semelyche colours, is dolven with rude wordes and boistous, and so drawe togidre to maken the catchers therof hen the more redy to hent sentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and some with wers, as with red inke, and some with coles and chalke: and yet is there gode matter to the leude people of thylke chalkye purtreiture, as hem thinketh for the time, and afterward the syght of the better colours yeven to hem more joye for the first leudenesse. So sothly this leude cloudy occupacyon is not to prayse, but by the leude, for comely leude leudenesse commendeth. Eke it shal yeve sight that other precyous thynges shall be the more in reverence. In Latin and French hath many soveraine wittes had grete delyte to endite, and have many noble thinges fulfild but certes there ben some that speken ther poysse mater in Frenche, of whiche speche the Frenche men have as gode a fantasie as we have in heryng of Frenche mens Englishe. And many termes there ben in Englishe, whiche uneth we Englishe men connen declare the knowleging: howe should than a Frenche man borne? soche termes connejumpere in his matter, but as the jay chattereth Englishe. Right so truly the understandyn of Englisshmen wol not stretche to the privie termes in Frenche, what so ever we bollen of straunge langage. Let than clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the propertie of science, and the knowinge in that facultie: and lette Frenche men in their Frenche also enditen ther queint termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthes; and let us shewe our fantasies in such wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke by lytel thank worthy for the leudeste in trawle, yet soch writing exiten men to thiike thinges that ben necessarie: for every man therby may as by a perpetual myrrour sene the vices or vertues of other, in whiche thyng lightly may be conceved to echue perils, and necessities to catch, after as aventures have fallen to other people or persons.

Certes the soverainst thinge of desire and most creature resonable, have or els shuld have full appetite to ther perfeccyon: unresonable bestes mowen not, sith the reson hath in hem no workinge: than resonable that wol not, is compared to unresonable, and made lyke hem. Forsoke the most soveraine and finall perfeccion of man is in knowynge of a suth, withouten any entent decevable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to know, and love his creatour.

Nowe principally the mene to brynge in knowleging and lovyng his creatour, is the consideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylke thinges that ben made, understandynge here to our wyttes, arne the uniene privitytes of God made to us sightfull and knowynge, in our contemplacion and understandynge.

Thule

THE HISTORY OF THE

These things than forsothe moche bringen us to the ful knowlege sothe, and to the parfite love of the maker of heavenly thynges. Lo! David saith: thou haste delited me in makinge, as who saith, to have delite in the tyme how God hath lent me in consideration of thy makinge. Wherof Aristotle in the boke de Animalibus, saith to naturell philosophers: it is a grette lykynge in love of knowinge ther creature: and also in knowinge of causes in kindlye thynges: considrid forsothe the formes of kindlye thynges and the shap, a gret kyndely love we shulde have to the werkman that hem made. The cratte of a werkman is shewed in the werk. Herefore trulie the philosophers with a lyvely studie mane noble thynges, righte precious, and worthy to memrye, written, and by a gret swet and travaile to us lessen of causes the properties in natures of thynges, to whiche theriore philosophers it was more joy, more lykynge, more herty lust in kindlye vertues and matters of reson the perfeccion by busy study to knowe, than to have had al the tresour, al the richeesse, al the vaine glory, that the passed emperours, pryncer, or kinges hadden. Therefore the names of hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and peccarne written; and in the contrarie, that is tofaine in Styxe the foule pitte of helle arne thilke pressed that soch gedenes hated. And because this boke shall be of love, and the prime causes of sterling in that doynge with passions and diselles for wantynge of desire, I wil that this boke be cleped the testament of love.

But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not in scorne laughe, to bere a ewarfe or els halie a man, say he wil rende out the swerde of Hercules handes, and also he shulde set Hercules Carres a mile yet fether, and over that he had power of strength to pull up the spere, that Alexander the noble might never wagge, and that passynge al thynges to ben mayster of Fraunce by might, theras the noble gracious Edwarde the thirde for al his gret prowesse in victories ne might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote well, ther shall be made more scorne and jape of me, that I so unworthely clothed altogether in the cloudie cloude of unconnyng, wil putten me in pres to speak of love, or els of the causes in that matter, sithen al the grettest clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who saith gathered up clene toforn hem, and with ther sharp synes of connyng al mowen and made therof grette rektes and noble, ful of al pienties to fode me and many an other. Envye forsothe commendeth now, be his reson, that he hath in hain, be it never so trusty. And although the noble repers, as gone workmen and worthy ther hie, han al draw and lounde up in the sheres, and made many shokes, yet have I ensample to gadre the smale crommes, and fullin ma walet of tho that fallen from the bourde among the smalle houndes, nowwithstonding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth at the remissailles, as trenchours, and the relese to bere to the almshouse. Yet also have I leve of the noble husbunde Boece, although I be straunger of connyng to come after his doctryne and these grette workmen, and glene my hart ful of the shedyng after ther handes, and yf I faille ought of my ful, to encrese my porcion with that I shal drawe by privities out of shokes; slye servaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in causes of thynges, was more hardier in the firste secher and so sayth Aristotle, and lighter in us that is folowed after. For ther passynge study han trefte our wittes, and oure understondynge han excied in consideration of trouthe by sharpenes of the reasons. Utterly these thynges be no dremes or japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouthe, and as they me betiden when I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, when the wether out of mesure was boitous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as this kind asketh, with drying: coldes maketh the waves of the ocean so to ayle unkindely over the common bankes that it was in point to spill all the erthe.

Of sundrie folk, by aventure yfall
In felship; and pilgimes wer they all;

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the time that he first began
To ride out, he lov'd Chevalrie,
Truth and honour, fredome and curtesy.
Full worthy was he in his lord 'is werre,
And thereto had he riddin name more ferre
A well in Christendom, as in Hethenes ;
And eke honoured for his worthines.

As Alexandre' he was, when it was won ;
Full of himis he had the bord begon
Among alle naciouns in Pruce :
He knew had he riddin, and in Luce,
No Cristen-man so oft of his degree
In Grana ; in the sege had he be
Of Alger, and ridd in Belmary ;
At Leyn was he, and at Sataly,
When that they wer won ; and in the grete see,
At many a noble army had he be :
At many batails had he ben offene,
And fighin for our feith at Tramefene,
In this thrys, and alwey slein his fo.

This ilke worthy knight had been also Somtimes with the lord of Palahy,
Ayen another bethin in Turkey ;
And evermore he had a few' rane prize ;
And though that he was worthy, he was wise ;
And of his port as meke as is a maid,
He seir yet no villany ne said
Hail his life unto no manner wight :
He was a very parfit gentil knight.
But for to tellen you of his array,
How he was good ; but he was nothing gay,
Of which he weid a gipon,
A le belounard with his haburgeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wente far to do his pilgrimage.

THE HOUSE OF FAME.

The first Boke.

NOW herkis, as I have you said,
What that I mette or I abraied,
Of December the tenich daie,
When it was night, to slepe I laie,
Ryht as I was wonte so to doen,
And fill aslepe wondir lone,
A be that was werie forgo
On pilgrimage milis two
To the corps of saint Leonarde,
To makin like that erst was harde.
But as me slep me mette I was Within a temple' imade of glas,
In whiche there weren mo images
Of gold, standyng in foudrie stages,
Some in mo riche subiracles,
And with parre mo pinnacles,
And mo curious portraitureis,
And quaint maner of figuris
Of gylde worke, then I saw ovir.

But certainly I n'ist nevir
Where that it was, but well wist I
It was of Venus redily
This temple, for in purtreiture
I sawe anone right her figure
Nakid ydetyng in a fe,
And also on her hedde parde
Her rosy garland white and redde,
And her combe for to kembe her hedde.
Her doves, and Dan Cupido
Her blinde sonne, and Vulcano,
That in his face ywas full broune.

But as I romid up and downe,
I founde that on the wall there was Thus written on a table' of bras.
I woll now syng, if that I can,
The armis, and also the man,
That first came through his destine
Fugitive fro Troye the cowntre
Into Itale, with full moche pine,
Unto the stondis of Lavine,
And tho began the storie' anone,
As I shall tellen you e.bone.

First sawe I the distruction
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his falsie untrue forswerynges,
And with his chere and his lelynges,
That made a horse, brought into Troye,
By whiche Trojans losse all ther joye :

And after this they graved, alas !
How Ilions castill assailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus slain,
And Polites his sonne certain,
Dispitously of Dan Pyrrus.

And next that sawe I how Venus,
When that she sawe the castill brende,
Doun from hevyn the gan descende,
And bade her sonne Eneas fle,
And how he fled, and how that he Escapid was from all the pres,
And toke his father' old Anchises,
And bare hym on his back awaie,
Crying alas and welawaie !

The whiche Anchises in his hande,
Bare also the goddis of the lande
I mene thilke that unbrendid were.

Then sawe I next that all in here
How Creusa, Dan Eneas wile,
Whom that he lov'd all his lie,
And her yong sonne clepid Iulo,
And eke Ascanius also,
Fleddin eke, with full drierie chere,
That it was pitie for to here,
And in a forest as they went How at a tournyng of a went Creusa was iloste, alas !
That rede not I, how that it was
How he her sought, and how her ghoste
Bad hym to fle the Grekis hollie,
And said he muir into Itale,
As was his destine, sauns taile,
That it was pitie for to here,
When that her spirete gan appere,
The wordis that she to him laied,
And for to kepe her sonne hym prairie.

Of that dere Trojan Æneas,
Sithins that he your sonne ywas.

Without order or due discrecion
Governid is by fortun 'is errour,
But nathelesse the lacke of her favour
Ne maie not doe me fying though that I die,
J'ay tout perdu, mon temps & labeur
For finally fortune I doe desie.
Yet is me left the sight of my rescua

To knowin frende fro fre in thy mirroure,
So moche hath yet thy tournyng up and doun,
I taughtin me to knowin in an hour,
But truly no force of thy reddour

To hym that ovr hymself hath maistrie,

For finally fortune I do desie.

The answer of Fortune.

No man is wretchid but hymself it wene,
He that ythath hymself hath suffisaunce,
Why saiest thou then I am to the so kene,
That hast thy self out of my govrnaunce?

Saie thus grant mercie of thin habundance,
That thou hast lent or this, thou shalt not

And eke thou haste thy beste frende alive.
How many have I refused to sustene,

Sith I have the fostrid in thy plesaunce?
Wolt thou then make a statue on thy quene,

That I shall be aie at thine ordinaunce?
Thou born art in my reign of variance,

About the whole with othir must thou drive
My lore is bet, then wicke is thy grevaunce,

And eke thou hast thy beste frende alive.

Princes I prae you of your gentilesse,
Let not this man and me thus crie and plain,
And I shall quistin you this businesse,
And if ye liste releve hym of his pain,
Praie ye his best frende of his noblenesse,
That to some bettir state he may attain.

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the same time with Chaucer. Out of his prologue to his third Book of the Fall of Princes
a few stanzas are selected, which, being compared with the style of his two contemporaries will show that our Language was then not written by caprice, but was in a settled state.

LIKE a pilgrime which that goeth on foote,
And hath none horse to releue his trausyle,
Whete, drye and wery, and may find no bote
Of wel cold whan thrust doth hym assaile,
Wine nor licour, that may to hym aysle,
Tight so fare which in my businesse,
No succour fynde my rudenes to redresse.

I meane as thus, I have no fresh licour
Out of the coaduteys of Calliope,
Nor through Clio in rhetorike no floure,
In my labour for to refresh me :
Nor of the fasters in noumber thirfe three,
Which with Cithera on Parnaso dwell,
They neuer gave me drink once of their wel.

Nor of their springes clere and cristalline,
That sprange by touchyng of the Pegase,
Their Favour lacketh my making ten lumine
I fynde theyr bawme of so great scarcitie,
To tame their tunnes with some drop of plentie
For Poliphemus throw his great blindnes,
Hath in me derked of Argus the brightnes.

Our life here short of wit the great dulnes
The bewy soule troubled with trausyle,
And of memorye the glasyng brotelhes,
Drede and vacuansing have made a strong batail
Whi verimes my spiritis to assaile.
And with their subtil creping in most quient
Hath made my spirit in making for to feint.

And overmore, the ferefull trowardnes
Of my stepmother called obliuion,
Hath a bastyll of forgetfulnes,
To stop the passage, and shadow my reason
That I might have no clere direccion,
In translating of new to quicke me,
Stories to write of olde antiquite.

Thus was I let and stode in double werre
The metyng of fearful wayes twayne,

The one was this, who euer list to lere,
Whereas good wyll gan me constrayne;
Bochas accomplish for to doe my payne,
Came ignoraunce, with a menace of drede,
My penne to rest I durst not procede.

Fortescue was chief justice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of king Henry VI. He retired in 1471. after the battle of Tewkesbury, and probably wrote most of his works in his privacy. The following passage is selected from his book of the Difference between an absolute and limited Monarchy.

HYT may peradventure be marvelid by some men, why one Realme is a Lordshyp only Royal, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, callid Jus Regale, and another Kyngdome is a Lordchip, Royall and Politike, and the Prynce theaof ruiyth by a Lawe, callid Jus Politicum & Regale; sythen thes two Prynces beth of egall Altate.

To this dowte it may be answered in this manner; the first Institution of thes twoo Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the cause of this diversyte.

When Nembroth by Might, for his own Glorye, made and incorporate the first Realme, and subduyd it to hymself by Tyrannye, he would not have it governyd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accomplishment thereof he made it.
And therfor, though he has thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyd to cal hym a Kyng, Quid Rex dicitur a Regendo; Whych thyng he wyl not, but oppressyd the People by Myght, and therfor he was a Tyrant, and callid Primus Ty-rannorum. But holy Writ callith hym Robustus Venator coram Deo. For as the hunter takyth the wyld beste for to sleie and eate hym; so Nem-broth subduyd to him the people with Might,
to have their service and their goods, using upon them the Lordship that is callid, Dominium Regale tantum. After him Belus that was callid first a Kyng, and after hym his Sonne Nynus, and after hym other Panyms; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmys, would not have them rulyd by other Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys been right good under good Prynces; and their Kyngdoms a thea most resembled to the Kingdome of God, which reynith upon Man, rulyng him by his own Will.
Wherefore many Crystyn Prynces usen the same
Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys iayen, Quod Principi placuit Legis habet vigorem. And thus I suppose first begane in Realmys, Domi-nium tantum Regale. But afterward, when Mankynd was more mansuete, and better disposyd to Vertue, Grete Communalities, as was the Feliship, that came into this Lond with Brute, wyllyng to be unyed and made a Body Politike callid a Realme, hayving an Heed to governe it;
as after the Saying of the Philosopher, every Communitie unyed of many parts must needs have an Heed; than they chole the same Brute

THE HISTORY OF THE

to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Institution, and on-yng of themself into a Realme, ordeynyd the same Realme so to be rulyd and justyfyd by such Lawys, as they al would assent unto; which Law therfor is callid Politicum, and bycause it is mynystrid by a Kyng, it is callid Regale. Dominium Politicum dicitur quasi Regimen, plurimum Scientia, sive Consilio ministratum. The Kyng of Scotts reynith upon his People by this Lawe, widelicet, Regimine Politico & Regali. And as Diodorus Syculus saith, in his Boke de priscis Historiis, The Realme of Egypte is rulid by the same Law, and therfor the Kyng therof chaungeth not his Lawes, without the Assent of his People. And in like forme as he saith is rulid the Kyngdome of Saba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Libie; And also the more parte of al the Realmys in Afrike. Which manner of Rule and Lordship, the sayd Diodorus in that Boke, praysith gretely. For it is not only good for the Prince, that may thereby the more sewerly do justice, than by his own Arbitriment;
 but it is also good for his People that receyve thereby, such Justice as they desyer themself.
 Now as me seymeth, it ys shewyd opynly nough,
 why one Kyng rulyth and reynith on his People
Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali: For that one Kyngdome beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and that other beganne, by the Desier and Institution of the People of the same Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was necessary to give a larger specimen, both because our language was then in a great degree formed and settled, and because it appears from Ben Jonson, that his works were considered as models of pure and elegant style. The tale, which is placed first, because earliest written, will show what an attentive reader will, in perusing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being disused among those classes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty, has suffered very little change. There is another reason why the extracts from this author are more copious:
 his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better trusted than any other edition of the English books of that or the preceding ages.

So long aboute,
They heue and shoue,
Togider that at last,
The mayd and wyfe,
To breake the strife,
Hyed them vpward fast.
And whan they spye,
The capytaynes lye
Both waltring on the place,
The freres hood,
They pulled a good,
Adowne about his face.
Whyle he was blynde,
The wenche behynde,
Lent him leyd on the flore,
Many a ioule,
About the noule,
With a great batyllore.
The wyfe came yet,
And with her fete,
She holpe to kepe him downe,
And with her rocke,
Many a knocke,
She gaue hym on the crowne.
They layd his mace,
About his face,
That he was wood for payne.
The frere frappe,
Gate many a swappe,
Tyll he was full nygh slayne.
Vp they hym lift,
And with yll thritt,
Hedlyng a long the stayre,
Downe they hym threwe,
A fyde adewe,
Commende us to the mayre.
The frere arofe,
But I suppose,

Amased was his hed,
He shoke his eares,
And from grete feares,
He thought hym well yfled.
Quod he now lost,
Is all this cost,
We be neuer the nere.
Ill mote he be,
That caused me,
To make myself a frere.
Now masters all,
Here now I shall.
Ende there as I began,
In any wyfe,
I would anyfe,
And counsayle every man,
His own crafte use,
All newe refuse,
And lightly let them gone:
Play not the frere,
Now make good chere,
And welcome euerych one.

A rusul lamentacion (writen by master Thomas More in his youth) of the deth of quene Elisabeth mother to king Henry the eight, wife to king Henry the seueoth, and eldest dought-ter to king Edward the fourth, which quene Elisabeth dyed in childbed in February in the yere of our Lord 1503, and in the 18 yere of the reigne of king Henry the seuenth.

O Ye that put your trust and confidence
In worldly joy and frayle prosperite,
That so lyue here as you should neuer hence,
Remember death and loke here vpon me.
Ensauple I thynke there may no better be.
Your selfe wotte well that in this realm was I,
Your quene but late, and lo now here I lye.
Was I not borne of olde worthy linage?
Was not my mother queene my father kyng?
Was I not a kinges fere in marriage?
Had I not plenty of euery pleasaunt thyng?
Mercifull god this is a strange rekenyng:
Rychesse, honour, welth, and aunceitry?
Hath me forsaken and lo now here I ly.

If worship myght have kept me, I had not gone.
If wyt myght haue me srued, I neded not fere.
If money myght haue holpe, I lacked none.
But O good God what vayleth all this gere.
When deth is come thy mighty messangere,
Obey we must there is no remedy,
Me hath he summoned, and lo now here I ly.
Yet was I late promised otherwyse,
This yere to liue in welth and delice.
Lo where to cometh thy blandishyng promyse,
O falsse astrology and deuynatrice,
Of goddes secretes making thy self so wyse.
How true is for this yere thy prophecy.
The yere yet lasteth, and lo now here I ly.
O brytill welth, as full of bitterneiss.
Thy sngle pleasure doubled is with payne.
Account my sorow first and my distresse,

THE HISTORY OF THE

In fondry wyfe, and reckon there agayne,
The ioy that I haue had, and I dare fayne,
For all my honour, endured yet haue I,
More wothan welth, and lo now here I ly.

Where are our castels, now where are our towers, Goodly Rychmonde fone art thou gone from me,

At Westminster that costly worke of yours,
Myne own dere lorde now shall I neuer see.
Almighty god vouchesafe to graunt that ye,
For you and your children well may edefy.
My palyce bylded is, and lo now here I ly.

Adew myne owne dere spouse my worthy lorde,

The faithfull loue that dyd us both combyne,
In mariage and peaceable concord,
Into your handes here I cleane resyne,
To be bestowed vpon your children and myne.
Erst wer you father, and now must ye supply,
The mothers part also, for lo now here I ly.

Farewell my daughter lady Margerete.
God wotte full oft it greued hath my mynde,
That ye should go where we should seldome mete.

Now am I gone, and haue lefte you behynde.
O mortall folke that we be very blynde.
That we least feare, full oft it is most nye,
From you depart I fyrst, and lo now here I
ly.

Farewell Madame my lordes worthy mother,
Comfort your sonne, and be ye of good chere.
Take all a worth, for it will be no nother.
Farewell my daughter Katherine late the fere.
To prince Arthur myne own child so dere,
It booteth not for me to wepe or cry,
Pray for my soule, for lo now here I ly.

Adew lord Henry my louyng sonne adew,
Our lorde encrease your honovr and estate.
Adew my daughter Mary bright of hew,
God make you vertuous wyfe and fortunate.
Adew swete hart my little daughter Kate,
Thou shalt swete babe suche is thy destiny
Thy mother neuer know, for lo now here I ly.

Lady Cicily Anne and Katheryne,
Farewell my welbelovd sisters three,
O lasty Briget other sister myne,
Lo here the ende of worldly vanitee.
Now well are ye that earthly foly flee,
And heavenly thynges loue and magnify.
Farewell and pray for me, for lo now here
I ly.

Adew my lordes, adew my ladies all,
Adew my faithfull ieruauntes everych one,
Adew my commons whom I neuer shall,
See in this world wherefore to the alone,
Immortal god verely three and one,
I me commend. Thy infinite mercy,
Shew to thy seruant, for lo now here I ly.

Certain meters in English written by master Thomas More in hys youth for the boke of fortune, and caused them to be printed in the begynning of that boke.

The wordes of Fortune to the people.

MINE high estate power and auctoritie,
If ye ne know, enserche and ye shal spy,

That richesse, worship, welth, and dignitie,
Joy, rest, and peace, and all thyng fynally,
That any pleasure or profit may come by,
To manner, comfort, ayde, and sustinaunce,
Is all at my deuyse and ordinaunce.

Without my fauour there is nothyng wonne.
Many a mattee haue I brought at last,
To good conclusion, that fondly was begonne.
And many a purpose, bounden sure and fast
With wile prouision, I haue ouercast.
Without good happe there may no wit suffice.
Better is to be fortunate than wyfe.

And therefore hath there some men ben or this,

My deadly foes and written many a boke,
To my dyspraye. And other cause there mys,
But for me list not frendly on them loke.
Thus like the fox they fare that once forfoke,
The pleasaunt grapes, and gaue for to defy them, Because he lepte and yet could not come by them.

But let them write theyr labour is in vayne.
For well ye wote, myrris, honour and richesse,
Much better is than penury and payne.
The nedy wretch that lingereth in distresse,
Without myne helpe is euer comfortlesse
A wery burden odious and loth,
To all the world, and eke to him selfe both.

But hethat by my fauour may ascende,
To mighty power and excellent degree,
A common wele to gouerne and defende,
O in how blist condicion standeth he:
Him self in honour and felicitye,
And ouer, that may farther and increase,
A region hole in ioyful rest and peace.

Now in this poynt there is no more to say,
Eche man hath of him selfe the gouernaunce.
Let every wight than folowe his owne way,
And he that out of pouertee or mischaunce,
Lift for to to liue, and wyll him self enhaunce,
In wealth and richesse, come forth and wayte on me.

And he that wyll, be a beggar let hym be.

THOMAS MORE to them that trust in Fortune.

THOU that are prowde of honour shapen kynne,
That hepest vp this wretched worldes treasure,
Thy fingers shined with gold, thy tawny
skynne,

With fresh apparyle garnished out of measure,
And weneest to haue fortune at thy pleasure,
Cast vp thyge eye, and loke how slipper
chaunce,

Illudeth her men with chaunge and varyaunce.
Sometyme she loketh as louely fayre and bright,

As goodly Uenus mother of Cupyde.
She becketteth and she smileth on every wight.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

But this chere fayned, may not long abide.
There cometh a cloude, and farewell all our pryde.

Like say serpent the beginneth to swell,
And looketh as fierce as any fury of hell.

Yet for all that her brotlen men are fayne,
(So wretched is our nature and so blynde)
As fowle as Fortune list to laugh agayne,
With sayre countenance and disceitfull mynde,
To crouche and kneele and gape after the wynde,

Not one or twayne but thousandes in a rout,
Ljke swarmyng bees come flickeryng her about

Then as a bayte she bryngeth forth her ware,
Silver, gold, riche perle, and precious stone :
On whiche the unsted people gafe and stare,
And gape therefore, as dogges do for the bone.
Fortune at them laugheth, and in her trooe
Amyd her treasure and waueryng rycheffe,
Proudly she boweth as lady and empressie.

Fast by her syde doth wery labour stand,
Pale fere also, and sorow all bewept,
Diddyn and hatred on the other hand,
Eke restless watche fro slepe with trasuyle kept,
His eyes drowny and lokyng as he slept.
Before her standeth daunger and enuy,
Flattery, dykeyt, mischiefe and tyranny.

About her commeth all the world to begge.
He sketh laude, and he to pas would bryng,
This toyce and that, and all not worth an egge :
He would in loue prosper aboue all thyng :
He kneeleth downe and would be made a kyng :
He seareth not so he may money haue,
Though all the world accompt hym for a knaue.

Lo thus ye see diuers heddes, diuers wittes.
Fortune alone as diuers as they all,
Vallable here and there among them sittes :
And as auenture downe her giftes fall,
Catch who so may the throweth great and small
Not to all men, as commeth sonne or dewe,
But for the most part, all among a fewe.

And yet her brotlen giftes long may not last.
He that she gase them, loketh prowde and hye.
She whirleth about and plucketh away as fast,
And giueth them to an other by and by.
And thus from man to man continually.
She vseth to geue and take, and slyly tosse,
One man to wyynyng of on others losse.

And when she robbeth one, down goth his pryde.

He wepeth and wayleth and curseth her full sore.
But he that receueth it, on that other syde,
Is glad, and blest her often tymes therefore.
But in a while when she loueth hym no more,
She glydeth from hym, and her giftes to,
And he her curseth, as other foolles do.

Alas the folysh people can not cease,
Ne voyd her trynue, tyll they the harme do fele.
About her alway, besely they preace.
But lord how he doth thynk hym selfe full wele,
That may set once his hande vppon her whele.
He holdeth fast : but upward as he sleeth,
She whippeth her whele about, and there he lyeth.

Thus fell Julius from his mighty power.
Thus fell Darius the worthy kyng of Perse.
Thus fell Alexander the great conquerour.
Thus many mo then I may well reherse.
Thus double fortune, when she lyst reuerse
Her slipper fauour fro them that in her trust,
She sleeth her way and leyleth them in the dust.
She sodeynly enhaunceth them aloft.

And sodeynly mischeueth all the flocke.
The head that late lay easly and full soft,
In stede of pylows lyeth after on the blocke.
And yet alas the most cruell proude mocke :
The deyntie mowth that ladyes kissed haue,
She bryngeth in the case to kyssie a knaue.

In chaunging of her course, the chaunge sheweth this, [knight,

Vp startth a knaue, and downe there saith a
The beggar ryche, and the ryche man pore is,
Hated is turned to loue, loue to despyght.
This is her sport, thus proueth she her myght.
Great bofte she maketh yf one be by her power,
Welthy and wretched both within an howre.

Pouertee that of her giftes wyl nothing take,
Wyth mery chere, looketh vpon the prece,
And seeth how fortunes houghold goeth to wrake.
First by her standeth the wyse Socrates,
Arriistippus, Pythagoras, and many a lefe,
Of olde philosophers. And eke agaynst the sonne

Bekyth hym poore Diogenes in his tone.

With her is Byas, whose country lackt defence,

And whylom of their foes stode so in dout,
That eche man hastily gan to carry thence,
And asked hym why he nought carryed out.
I bere quod be all myne with me about :
Wisedom he ment, not fortunes brotlen fees ;
For nought he counted his that he might leefe.]

Heraclitus eke, lyst fellowship to kepe
With glad pouertee, Democritus also :
Of which the fyrst can neuer cease but wepe,
To see how thicke the blinded people go,
With labour great to purchase care and wo.
That other laugheth to see thee foolysh apes,
Howe earnestly they walk about theyr capes.

Of this poore sect, it is comen vsage,
Onely to take that nature may sustayne,
Banishing cleane all other surplusage,
They be content, and of nothyng complayne,
No nygarde eke is of his good so fayne.
But they more pleasure haue a thousande folde,
The secret draughts of nature to beholde.

Set fortunes seruauntes by them and ye wull,
That one is free, the other euer thrall,
That one content, that other neuer full.
That one in suretye, that other like to fall.
Who lyst to aduise them both, parceyve he shall,

As great difference between them as we see,
Betwixte wretchednes and felicitye.

Nowe haue I shewed you bothe : these whiche ye lyst.

Stately fortune, or humble pouertee :
That is to say, nowe lyeth it in your syst,
To take here bondage, or free libertee.

THE HISTORY OF THE

But in thys poynte and ye do after me,
Draw you to fortune, and labour her to please,
If that ye thynk your selfe to well at ease.

And fyrst vpon the louely shall she smile,
And frendly on the cast her wandering eyes,
Embrace the in her armes, and for a while,
Put the and kepe the in a foolles paradise:
And forth with all what so thou lyst deuise,
She will the graunt it liberally parhappes:
But for all that beware of after clappes.

Recken you neuer of her fauoure sure:
Ye may in cloudes at easly trace an hare,
Or in dry lande cause fishes to endure,
And make the burning fyre his heate to spare,
And all thys worlde in compace to forsaie,
As her to make by craft or engine stable,
That of her nature is ever variable.

Serue her day and nyght as reuerently,
Vpon thy knees as any seruant may,
And in conclusion, that thou shalt winne thereby
Shall not be worth thy seruyce I dare say.
And looke yet what she geueth the to day,
With labour wenne she shall happily to morrow,
Pluck it agayne out of thine hand with sorrow.

Wherefore yf thou in suretye lyst to stande,
Take pouerities parte and let proude fortune go,
Receyue nothing that cometh from her hande.
Loue maner and vertue: they be onely the,
Whiche doubte fortune may not take the fro.
Then mayst thou boldly desye her turnayng
chaunce:

She can the neyther hynder nor auance.

But and thou wilt nedes meddle with her treasure,

Trust not therein, and spende it liberally.
Beare the not proude, nor take not out of measure,

Bylde not thyn house on heyth vp in the skye.
None falleth farre, but he that climbeth hye,
Remember nature sent the hyther bare,
The gyftes of fortune count them borrowed ware.

THOMAS MORE to them that seke Fortune.

WHOSO delyteth to prouen and assay,
Of wavering fortune the vncertayne lot,
If that the auniwere please you not alway,
Blame ye not me: for I commaunde you not,
Fortune to trust, and eke full well ye wot,
I haue of her no brydle in my fist,
She renneth loose, and turneth where she lyst.

The rolling dyse in whome your lucke doth stande,

With whos vnhappy chaunce ye be so wroth,
Ye knowe yourselfe came nesar in myne hande.
Lo in this ponde be fyshes and frogges both Cast in your nette: but be you liefse or lothe,
Hold you content as fortune lyst assyue:
For it is your own fishyng and not myne.

And though in one chaunce fortune you offend,

Grudge not there at, but beare a merry face.
In many an other the shall it amende.

There is no manne so farre out of her grace,

But he sometyne hath comfort and solace:
Ne none agayne so farre forth in her fauour,
That is full satisfied with her behauiour.

Fortune is fately, solemne, and bye:

And rycheles geueth, to haue seruyce therefore.

The nedy begger catcheth an halpenny:
Some manne a thousande pound, some lesse
some more.

But for all that the kepeth euer in store,
From euery manne some parcell of his wyll,
That he may pray therefore and serue her styll.

Some manne hath good, but chyldren hath he none

Some man hath both, but he can get none health.

Some hath al thre, but vp to honours trone,
Can be not crepe, by no manner of steth.
To some the sendeth, children, ryches, wealth,
Honour, woorthyp, and reuerence all hys lyfe:
But yet the pyncheth hym with a throwed wife.

Then for aimuch as it is fortunes guyfe,
To graunt no manne all thyng that he wyll axe,
But as her selfe lyst order and denyfe,
Doth euery manne his part diuide and tax,
I counsayle you eche one truste vp your packes,
And take no thyng at all, or be content,
With such rewarde as fortune hath you sent.

All thynges in this boke that ye shall rede,
Doe as ye lyst, there shall no manne you bynde,
Them to beleue, as surely as your crede,
But notwithstanding certes in my mynde,
I durst well swere, as true ye shall them fynde,
In euery poynt eche answere by and by,
As are the iudgements of astronomye.

The Description of RICHARD the thirde.

RICHARDE the thirde sonne, of whom we nowe entreate, was in witte and courage egall with either of them, in bodye and pro-wesse farre vnder them bothe, little of stature, ill fetured of limmes, croke backed, his left shovlder much higher than his right, hard fauoured of visage, and such as is in states called warlyce, in other manne orherwise, he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth, ever froworde. It is for trouth reported, that the duches his mother had so much a doe in her trauaile, that shee coule not bee delinered of hym vacutte: and that hee came into the world with his fete forwarde, as menne bee borne outwarde, and as the same runneth, also not untowed, whether menne of hatred reporte aboute the trouthe, or elles that nature changed her course in hys beginninge, whiche in the course of his lyfe many things unnaturallye committed. None euill captaine was hee in the warre, as to whiche his disposition was more merely than for peace. Sundrye victories hadde hee, and sometime ouerthrowes, but neuer in defaulte as for his owne persone, either of hardinesse or polityke order, free was hee called of dyspence, and somewhat aboute hys

power libtall, with large giftes hee get him valentia frendshippe, for whiche hee was faine to giue and spoyle in other places, and get him frendes abroad. Hee was close and secrete, a close dissembler, lowlye of countenauance, argument of heart, outwardly complayable where he inwardly hated, not letting to kisse whome hee thought to kyll: dispitious and cruell, not in will will alway, but after for ambition, and eiber for the frenetic or encrease of his estate. Frende and foe was muche what indifferent, where his aduantage grew, he spared no means to take, whose life withstode his purpose. Hee liued with his owne handes king Henry the first, being prisoner in the Tower, as meane constantly hee, and that without commendement or knowledge of the king, whiche would vndoubtedly if he had intended that thinge, haue appointed that butcherly office, to some other then his owne borne brother.

Some wile meane also weene, that his drift openly camynde, lacked not in helping furth to brother Clarence to his death: whiche hee related openly, howbeit somewhat (as meane do) more faintly then he that wer hartely moued to his wish. And they that thus deme, think that he long time in king Edwardes life, forethought to be king in that case the king his brother (whose life hee looked that euill dyete should happen to decaie (as in case he did) while his children wer yonge. And the deeme, that for thys intente hee was gladd of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whose life most needes haue hindered hym so camynde, whither the same duke of Clarence had kepte him true to his nephew the yonge king, or enterprised to be kyng himselfe. But of this pointe, is there no certaintie, and whose drunke vpon coniectures, maye as wel shote to erre as to shote. How be it this haue I by credible information learned, that the seile aght in whiche kyng Edward died, one Middlebrooke longe ere mornyng, came in pson hys to the house of one Pottyer dwelling in Botetrotte strete without Crepalgate: and when hee was with hasty rapping quickly letten in, hee shewed vnto Pottyer that kyng Edward was departed. By my trouthe manne quod Pottyer then wylly my mayster the duke of Gloucester be kyng. What cause hee hadde soo to saye hee is to saye, whyther hee beinge near him, aye thynge knewe that hee suche thynge purposed, or otherwyle had aye inkelynged that hee was not likely to speake it of anpther.

But nowe to retorne to the course of this lyf, were it that the duke of Gloucester hadde of old foreminded this conclusion, or was moued at erke cheruanto moued, and putte in by the occasion of the tender age of the yonge prince, his nephues (as opportunitye and lykehood of spide, putteth a manne in charge of that hee neuer intended) certayn is it that hee contriued theyr destruction, with the dispacion of the regal dignitie vpon himselfe.

And for as muche as hee well wiste and helpe to maystayn, a long continued grudge and heerte breannyng betwene the queene kinned and the kinges blood epyther partye enuyng others authoritie, hee nowe thought that their deuision should be (as it was in dede) a fortherlye begynnyng to the purfuite of his intente, and a sure ground for the foundation of al his building yf he might firste vnder the pretext of reuengyng of olde displeasure, abate the anger and ygnorance of the tene partie, to the destruccion of the other: and then wynde to his purpose as manye as he coule: and those that coule not be wonne, myght be lesse ere they looked therefore. For of one thynge was hee certayne, that if his entente were perceiued, hee shold soone haue made peace betwene the bothe parties, with his owne blode.

Kyng Edward in his life, albeit that this disencion betwene hys frendes somewhat yrked hym: yet in his good health hee forment what the lesse regarded it, because hee thought whatsoeuer busines should falle betwene them hymselfe should alwaye be able to rule bothe the parties.

But in his last sicknesse, when hee perceiued his naturall strengthe soo fore enfebled, that hee dyspayred all recoverye, then hee confyderynge the youthe of his chyldren, albeit hee sothyng lesse mistrusted then that that happened, yet well forsynging that manye harmes myghte growe by theyr debate, whyle the youth of hys chyldren shoulde take discrecion of themselfe and good counsaile, of their frendes, of whiche either party shold counsaile for their owne commoditie and rather by pleasaunte aduise too wynde themselfe fauour, then by profitable aduertisements to do the chyldren good, hee called some of them before him that were at varysaunce, and in effectyall the lorde marques Dorsete the queenes son by her fyrste househoode, and Richard the lorde Hastynges, a noble man, then lorde chamberlayne agayne whome the queene specially grudged, for the great fauoure the kyng bare hym, and also for that shee thoughte hym secretelye famylier with the kyng in warren companye. Her kynged also bare hym sore, as well for that the kyng hadde made hym capitayne of Calyce (whiche office the lorde Ryters brother to the queene claimed of the Kinges former promyse as for diuerse other great giftes whiche hee receyued, that they looked for. When these lordes with diuerse other of bothe the parties were come in presence, the kynge I kinge vpe himselfe and vaderlette with pilowes, as it is reported on this wyse sayd vnto them, My lordes, my dere kinsmenne and afe, in what plichte I lye you see, and I feele. By whiche the lesse whyle I looke to lye with yu, the more depeyle am I moued to care in what case I leaue you, for such as I leaue you, sicke be my chyldren lyke to fynde you. Whiche if they shoulde (that Godde forbydde) fynde you at varysaunce, myghte happe to fall themselfe at warre ere their discrecion would serue to sette you you at peace. Ye se their youthe, of whiche I reckon the onely suretie to sette in youre concord. For it sufficeth not that al you loue them, yf eche of you hate other. If they wer menne, your faithfullnesse happelye woulde suffice. But childehood must be maintained by mens authority, and slipper youth vnderpropped with elder counsaile, which neither they can haue, but ye geue it, nor ye geue it, yf ye gree not. For wher eche labourereth to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of ech of others person, impugnereth eche others counsaile, there muil it nedes bee long ere anye good conclusion goe forward. And also while either partye labourereth to be chiefe, flattery shall haue more place then plaine and faithfull aduise, of whyche muste needes ensue the euill-bringing vpper of the prynce, whose mynd in tender youth infest, shall redily fall to mikchief and riot, and drawe down with this noble realme to ruine, but if grace turn him to wisdom: which if God send, then thei that by euill meanes before pleased him best, shal after fall farthest out of fauour, so that euer at length euil driftes dreue to nought, and good plain wayes prosper. Great variance hath ther long bene betwene you, not alway for great causes. Sometime a thing right wel intended, our misconstruction turneth vnto worse or a smal displeasure done vs, eyther ovr owne affection or euil tongues agreth. But this wote I well ye neuer had so great cause of hatred, as ye haue of loue. That we be al men, that we be christen men, this shall I leaue for preachers to tel you (and yet I wote nere whither any preachers wordes ought more to moue you, then his that is by and by gooying to the place that thei all preache of.) But this shal I desire you to remember, that the one parte of yow is of my bloode, the other of myne allies, and eche of yow with other, eyther of kindred or affinitye, whiche spirytually kynred of affynity, if the sacramentes of Christes charche, beare that weyght with vs that woulde Godde thei did, shoulde no lesse moue us to charitee, then the respecte of fleshye consanguinitye. Oure Lords forbydde, that you loue together the worse, for the selke cause that you ought to loue the better. And yet that happeneth. And no where fynde were so deadlye debate, as among them, whyche by nature and lawe moste oughte to agree together. Suche a pestilente serpente is ambition and desyre of vaine glorye and foueraignty, whiche among states where he once entreth crepeth sooth so farre, tyll with deuision and variance hee turneth all to mischief. Firste longing to be nexte the best, afterwarde egall with the beste, and at laste chiefe and aboue the beste. Of which immoderate appetite of woorschip, and thereby of debate and dissencion what losse, what sorrowe, what trouble haue within these fewe yeares growen in this realme, I praye Godde as well forgeate as we well remember.

Whiche thinges yf I coulde as well haue forseene, as I haue with my more payne then pleasure proued, by Goddes blessed Ladie (that was euer his othe) I woulde neuer haue won the courtseye of mennes knee, with the losse of soo many heades. But sithen thynges passed cannot be gaine called, muche oughte we the more beware, by what occasion we haue taken soo greate hurte afore, that we esteemes fall not in that occasion agayne. Nowe be those griefes passed, and all is (Godde be thanked) quiete, and like his righte wel to prosper in wealthfull peace vnder your cofeyns my children, if Godde sende them life and you loue. Of whyche twoo thinges, the lesse losse wer they by whome thoughte Godde diidde hys pleasure, yet shoulde the realme alway finde kinges and peradventure as good kinges. But yf you among youre selfe in a chिल्des reygne fall at debate, many a good man shall perish and hapely he to, and ye to, ere thys land finde peace again. Wherefore in these last wordes that euer I looke to speak with you: I exhort you and require you al, for the loue that you haue euer borne to me, for the loue that our Lord beareth to vs all, from this time forward, all grieues forgotten, eche of you loue other. Whiche I verelye truste you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, either Godde or your king, affinitye or kindred, this realme, your owne countrey, or your owne surety. And therewithal the king no longer enduring to sitte vp, laide him down on his right side, his face toward them: and none was there present that coulde refrain from weeping. But the lordes recomforting him with as good wordes as they could, and answering for the time as thei thought to stand with his pleasure, there in his presence (as by their wordes appered ech forgate other, and ioyned their hands together, when (as if after appeared by their dedes) their hearts were far a sonder. As sone as the king was departed, the noble prince his sonne drew toward London, which at the time of his decease, kept his household at Ludlow in Wales Which countrey being far off from the lawe and recourse to iustice, was begon to be farre out of good wyll and waxen wild, robbers and rioters walking at libertie vncorrected. And for this encheason the prince was in the life of his father sent thither, to the end that the authoritie of his presence, should refraine euill disposed persons from the boldnes of their former outrages, to the gouernance and ordering of this young prince at his sending thither, was there appointed Sir Antony Wodsaile lord Runers and brother vnto the queene, a right honourable man, as valiaunte of hande as politike in counsaile. Adioyned wer there vnto him other of the same partie, and in effect every one as he was neres of kin vnto the queene, so was planted next about the prince. That drift by the queene not vniuely deuised, whereby her bloode mighte of youth be rooted in the princes fauor, the duke of Gloucester turned vnto their destruccions, and vpon that grounde set the foundation of all his unhappy building.

to say. For whom sooner he perceived, either distance with them, or bearing himself their face, bee drake unto them, some by mouth, som by writing and secret messengers, that it myght was reason nor in any wile to be suffered, that the yonge king their master and liege-man, should be in the handes and custodie of his mothers kindred, sequestred in maner from their company and attendance, of which euer one ought him as faithful seruice as they,
and manye of them far more honorable part of his then his mothers side: whose blood (good be) hauing the kinges pleasure, was ful tanely to be matched with his: whiche were to be as who say remoued from the king, and the lesse noble to be left shoute to, is (good be) neither honorable to hys maiestie, nor unto vs, and also to his grace no fity to haue the mightiest of his frendes from him, and unto vs no little iopardy, to suffer our welwounde euil willers, to grow in overgrowne authoritie with the prince in youth, namely which is light of beliefe and sone perswaded.
Yet remember I trow king Edward himself, al-be he was a maner of age and of discrecion, yet was he in many thynges ruled by the heart, more then stode either with his honour, or our profite, or with the commoditie of any maner th, except onely the immoderate ad-uancement of them selfe. Which whiche they later thirsted after their own weale, or of vs, it wer hard I wene to gesse. And thence flieth friendship had not holden better pace with the king, then any respect of kin-red, they might peraduenture easily haue betrayed and brought to confusion somme of vs euen. Why not as easily as they haue done for other alreadye, as nere of his royal bloude as we. But our Lord hath wrought his wil, and thanks be to his grace that peril is past.
It is be it as great is growing, yet we suffer the yonge king in our enemyes hande, whiche without his wytyng, might abuse the name of liege-man, to any of our vndoing, with thyng God and good prouision forbyd.
O which good prouision none of us hath any long the life neede, for the late made at-tencement, in whiche the kinges pleasure hadde more place then the parties willes. Nor none of us I beleue is so warye, ouerone to trulle a seuer frende made of an old foe, or to make that an honeste kindnes, suddenlye contrived in one houre continued, yet faine a fortune, should be deeper fetted in their itrackes:
for a long accustomed malice many yeres old.

With these wordes and wrytynges and suche other, the duke of Gloucester sone set a lyre, them that were of themselves to kinde,
and in speciall twayne, Edward duke of Buckingham, and Richard lord Hastings and chamberlaine, both men of honour and of great power. The one by yonge succession from his auncie, the other by his office and the larges fauor. These two not bearing eche to other so muche lone, as hatred bothe unto the queene parte: in this poynte accorded together wyth the duke of Gloucester, that they wolde vterlye smoothe (so the kynges companye, all his mothers frendes, vnder the name of their enemyes. Vpon this concluded, the duke of Gloucester understanding, that the lordes whiche at that tyme were about the kyng, extended to bryng him vpp to his coronacion.

accompanied with suche power of their frendes,
that it should bee harde for hym to brynge his purpose to passe, without the gathering and great assemble of people and in maner of open warre, whereof the end he wiste was doubtuous, and in which the kyng being on their side, his part should haue the face and name of a rebellion: he secretly therefore by duers meanes, caused the queene to be persuaded and brought in the mynd, that it neither wer nede, and also shold be iopardous, the king to come vp strong. For where as nowe euery lorde loued other, and none other thing studied vpon, but aboute the coronacion and honour of the king: if the lordes of her kindred shold assemble in the kinges name muche people, they shold geue the lordes awixte whome and them hadde bene sommetyme debate, to feare and suspicte, leste they should gather thys people, not for the kynges sauegarde whom no man enpugned, but for their destruccion, hauning more regard to their olde variance, then their newe stonement.
For whiche cause they shold assemble on the other partie much people agayne for their defence, whole power the wyll wel farre stretched. And thus shold all the realme fall on a rore. And of al the hurte that therof shold ensue, which was like'y not to be litle, and the most harme there like to fal where the lest would, all the worlde woulde put her aid her hindred in the wyght, and say that they had vnwyselye and untrewlye also, broken the amitie and peace that the kyng her husband so pruden-telye made betwene hys kinne and hers in his death bed, and whiche the other party faithfully obserued.

The queene being in this wile perswaded, suche wordes sent vnto her sonne, and vnto her brother being aboute the kyng, and ouer that the duke of Gloucester himselfe and other lordes the chiefe of hys bande, wrote vnto the kyng for reuerenlye, and to the queenes frendes, there too bryngelye, that they nothyng earthlye mystruftyng, broughte the kyng vppe in greute batle, not in good spee, with a fouer companye. Nowe was the king in his waye to London gone, from Northampton, when the duke of Gloucester and Buckyngham came thither. Where remained behynd, the lord Ryars the kynges vocle, entending on the morrowe to folow the kyng, and bee with hym at Stony Stratford.

grate while. But incontynente after that they were openlye with grete courtesye departed, and the lorde Riuers lodged, the dukes secretelye with a fewe of their most priuie frendes, sette them downe in counsaile, wherin they spent a great parte of the nyght. And at their risinge in the dawninge of the day, thei sent about priuily, to their seruantes in their innes and lodgings about, geuinge them commaundemente to make them selfe shortly readye, for their lordes wer to horsebackward vpon whiche messages, manye of their folke were attendaunt, when manye of the lord Riuers seruantes were vnradye. Now hadde these dukes taken also in to their custodye the keyes of the inne, that none should passe forth without theyr licence.

And ouer this in the hyghe waye towardes Stonye Stratforde where the kyng laye, they hadde bestowen certayne of theyr folke, that shoulde sende backe agayne, and compell to retorne, any manne that were gotten oute of Northampton toward Stony Stratforde, tyll they should geue other licence. For as muche as the dukes themselfe entended for the shewe of theyre dylygence, to be the fyrste that shoulde that daye attende vpon the kynges highnesse oute of that towne: thus bare theyr folke in hande. But when the lorde Ryuers vnderstode the gates closed, and the wayes on euery side besetted, neyther hys seruantes nor hymselfe suffered to go oute, perceyving well so grete a thyng without his knowledge not begun for noughte, comparing this manner present with this last nightes chere, in so fewe hours so gret a change maruelouslye misliked. How be it sith hee coule not geat awaye, and keepe himselfe close, hee woulde not, lest he shoulde seeme to hyde himselfe for some secret feare of hys owne faulte, whereof he saw no such cause in hym self: he determined vpon the suretie of his own conscience, to goe boldelye to them, and inquire what thys matter myghte meane. Whome as soone as they sawe, they begonne to quarrell with hym, and saye, that hee intended to sette distance betweene the kyng and them, and to brynge them to confusion, but it shoulde not lye in hys power. And when hee begonne (as hee was a very well spoken manne) in goodly wise to excuse himselfe, they taryed not the ende of his answer, but shortly tooke him and putte him in ward, and that done, forthwyth wente to horsebacke, and tooke the waye to Stonye Stratforde. Where they founde the kyng with his companie readye to leape on horsebacke, and depart forward, to leue that lodging for them, because it was to streight for bothe companies. And as sone as they came in his presence, they lighte adowne with all their companie aboute them. To whome the duke of Buckingham saide, goe afore gentlemeane and yemen, kepe youre rowmes. And thus in goodly arraye, thei came to the kyng, and on their knees in very humble wise, saluted his grace: whiche receyued them in very ioyous and amiable maner, nothinge earthlye knowinge

nor mistrustinge as yet. But euen by and by in his presence they picked a quarrell to the lorde Richarde Graye, the kynges other brother by his mother, sayinge that hee with the lorde marques his brother and the lorde Riuers his vncle, hadde compasssed to rule the kyng and the realme, and to sette variance among the states, and to subdewe and deffroye the noble blood of the realme. Toward the accomplishinge whereof, they sayde that the lorde Marques hadde entered into the Tower of London, and thence taken out the kynges treasor, and sent meane to the sea. All whiche thinge these dukes wiste well were done for good purposes and necessari by the whole counsaile at London, sauing that somewhat thei must faile. Vnto whiche wordes, the king answered, what my brother Marques hath done I cannot faile. But in good faith I dare well answer for myne vncle Riuers and my brother here, that thei be innocent of any such matters. Ye my liege quod the duke of Buckingham thei haue kepte their dealing in these matters farre fro the knowledge of your good grace. And forthwith they arrested the lorde Richarde and Sir Thomas Vaughan, knight, in the kynges presence, and broughte the king and alle backe vnto Northampton, where they tooke againe further counsaile. And there they sent awaie from the kyng whome it pleased them, and sette newe seruantes aboute him, suche as lyked better them than him. At whiche desyngs hee wepte and was nothinge contente, but it booted not. And at dynner the duke of Gloucester sente a dishe from his owne table to the lord Riuers, prayinge him to be of good chere, all shoulde be well inough. And he thanked the duke, and prayed the messenger to beare it to his nephewe the lorde Richard with the same message for his comfort, who he thought had more neede of comfort, as one to whom such aduersitie was strange. But himselfe had beene al his days in vntowther, and therefore coule beare it the better. But for al this comfortable courtesye of the duke of Gloucester, he sent the lord Riuers and the lorde Richarde with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the North country into diuers places to prison, and afterward al to Pomfrait, where they were in conclusion beheaded.

A letter written with a cole by Sir THOMAS MORE to hys daughter maistres MARGARET ROBEY, within a while after he was prisoner in the Towre.

from whose works it seems proper to insert a few stanzas, though he cannot be said to have attained great elegance of language.

Of the wits that flourished in the reign of Henry VIII. none has been more frequently celebrated than the earl of Surry, and this history would therefore have been imperfect without some specimens of his works, which yet it is not easy to distinguish from those of Sir Thomas Wyat
and others, with which they are confounded in the edition that has fallen into my hands.
The three first are, I believe, Surry's; the rest, being of the same age, are selected, some as examples of different measures, and one as the oldest composition which I have found in blank verse.

Description of Spring, wherein eche thing re-newes, save only the lover.

THE soote season that bud, and blooms fourth bringes,
With grene hath cladde the hyll, and eke the vale,

The Nightingall with fethers new the singes;
The turtle to her mate hath told her tale:
Somers is come, for every spray now springes.
The hart hath hunged hys olde head on the pale,
The bucke in brake his winter couthe he flynges;
The fishes flete with newe repayred scale:
The adder all her slough away the flynges,
The twit (swallow) pursueth the flies smalle,
The busy bee her honey howe the mynges;
Winter is worne that was the floures bale.
And thus I see among these pleasant thynges
Eche care decays, and yet my sorrow springes.

Description of the restless estate of a lover.

WHEN youth had led me half the race,
That Cupides scourge had made me
runne;
I looked back to meet the place,
From whence my weary courie begumme;
And when I saw howe my desyre
Misguiding me had led the waye,
Myne eyne to greedy of theyre hyre,
Had made me lose a better prey.
For when in sighes I spent the day,
And could not cloake my grief with game;
The boylng smoke dyd still bewray,
The present heat of secret flame:
And when salt teares do bayne my breast,
Where love his pleasant traynes hath sowne,
Her beauty hath the fruytes opprest,
Ere that the budde were spronge and blowne.
And when myne eyen dyd still pursue,
The flying chaic of theyre request;

THE HISTORY OF THE

Theyre greedy looks dyd oft renew,
The hydden wounde within my breste.

When every loke these cheecks might stayne,
From dedly pale to glowing red :
By outward signes appeared playne,
To her for helpe my hart was fled.

But all to late Love learneth me,
To paynt all kind of Colours new :
To bynd theyre eyes that elle should see
My speckled cheecks with Cupids hew.

And now the covert brest I claime,
That worshipt Cupide secretly ;
And nourished hys sacred flame,
From whence no blairing sparks do flye.

Description of the fickle Affections, Pangs, and Sleights of Love.

SUCH wayward wayes hath Love, that most part in discord
Our willes do stand, whereby our hates but seldom do accord :

Decyte is hys delighte, and to begyle and mocke
The simple hartes which he doth strike with sroward divers stroke.

He causeth th' one to rage with golden burning darte,

And doth slay with Leaden cold, again the others harte.

Whose gleames of burning fyre and easy sparkes of flame,

In balance of unequal weyght he pondereth by ame

From calse ford where I myghte wade and pass full well,

He me withdrawes and doth me drive, into a depe dark hell :

And me withholdes where I am calde and ofred
place,

And willes me that my mortal foe I do beseke of Grace ;

He lettes me to pursue a conquest welnere worne
To follow where my paynes were lost, ere that my sute begunne.

So by this means I know how soon a hart may turne

From warre to peace, from truce to stryfe, and so agayne retorne.

I know how to content my self in others lust,
Or little stuffe unto my self to weave a webbe of trust :

And how to hyde my harmes with sole dyssem-bling chere,

When in my face the painted thoughtes would outwardly appeare

I know how that the blood forsakes the face for dred,

And how by shame it staynes agayne the Cheeks with flaming red :

I know under the Grene, the Serpent how he liukes :

The hammer of the relesse forge I wote eke
how it workes.

I knowe and con by roate the tale that I would tell

But ofte the wordes come fourth awrye of him that loveth well.

I know in heate and cold the Lover how he shakes,

In synnging how he doth complayne, in sleeping
how he wakes

To languish without ache, sickleesse for to consume,

A thousand thynges for to devyse, resolvyng of his fume ;

And though he lyfte to see his Ladyes Grace full
fore

Such pleasures as delygth hys Eye, do not his healthe restore,

I know to seke the tracte of my desired foe,
And tere to fynde that I do seek, but chiefly this
I know,

That Lovers must transourme into the thyng beloved,

And live (alas I who would believe ?) with sprite from Lyfe removed.

I knowe in hartie sighes and laughter of the spleece,

At once to chaunge my state, my will, and eke
my colour ciene.

I know how to deceyve my self wythe others
helpe,

And how the Lyon chastised is, by beatyng of the whelp.

In standyng here the fyre, I know how that I trease ;

Farre of I burne, in bothe I waste, and so my Lyfe I lesse.

I know how Love doth rage upon a yeylding
mynde,

How smalle a nete may take and make a harte of gentle kinde :

Or elle with seldom swete to season hepes of gall, Revived with a glympse of Grace old sorowes to let fall.

The hydden traynes I know, and secret snares of love.

How soone a loke will prynte a thoughte that never may remove.

The slpyper state I know, the sodein turnes from welthe

The doubtful hope, the certaine woode, and sure despayred helthe.

A praise of his ladie.

GIVE place you ladies and be gone,
Boast not your selves at all,

For here at hande approacheth one,
Whose face will stayne you all.

The vertue of her lively lookes
Excels the precious stone,

I wishe to have none other books
To rede or look upon.

In echc of her two christall eyes,
Smyleth a naked boy ;

It would you all in heart suffise
To see that lampe of joye.

I think nature hath lost the mouldre,
Where she her shape did take ;

Or elle I doubtc if nature coulde
So fayre a creature make

She may be well comparde
Unto the Phenix kinde,

The Death of ZOROAS, an Egiptian astronomer, in the first sight that Alexander had with the Persians.

NOW clautring armes, now raging broyle of warre,
Gas passe the noys of dreadfull trumpetts clang,
Scurrowed with shafts, the heaven with cloudes of darts,

Covered the ayre. Against full fatted bulles,
As forceth kyndled yre the Lyons keene,
Whole greedy gutts the gnawing hunger prickes;
So Macedons against the Persians fere,
Now corpses hyde the purpurde foyle with blood;
Large slaughter on eche side, but Perles more,
Most fields bebled, their hearts and numbers bate,

Fainted while they gave backe, and fall to flighte.
The listening Macedon by swords, by gleaves,
By bands and troupes of footmen, with his garde.
Speedes to Dary, but hyra his marell kyn,

Oxate preserves with horsemen on a plump
Before his carr, that none his charge should give.
Here grunts, here groans, ech where strong youth is spent :

Shaking her bloody hands, Bellone among
The Perles soweth all kinds of cruel death :
With throte yent he coares, he lyeth along
His entrailles with a launce through gryded quyte,
Hym smytes the club, hym woundes farre stryking bowe,

And him the sling, and him the shining sword ;
He dyeth, he is all dead, he pants, he rests.
Right over stoode in snowwhite armour brave,
The Memphite Zoroas, a cunningy clarke,
To whom the heaven lay open as his booke ;
And in celestiall bodies he could tell
The moving meeting light, aspect, eclips,
And influence, and conitellations all ;
What earthly chaunces would betyde, what yere,
Of plenty storde, what singe forewarned death,
How winter gendreth snow, what temperature
In the prime tyde doth season well the soyle,
Why summer burnes, why autumn hath ripe grapes,

Whither the circle quadrate may become,
Whither our tunes heavens harmony can yelde
Of four begyns among themselves how great Proportion is ; what way the erryng lightes
Doth tend in course gayne that fyrst movyng heaven ;

What, gree, one from another distant be,
What start doth leu the hurtfull fyre to rage,
Or him more mylde what opposition makes,
What fyre doth qualifie Mavoris fyre,
What houle eche one doth seeke, what plannett raignes

Within this heaven sphere, nor that small thynges
I speake, whole heaven he closeth in his breitt.
This sage then in the starres hath spied the fates
Threatened him death without delay, and sub,
He saw he could not fathall order change,
Foreward he prest in battayle, that he might Mete with the rulers of the Macedons,
Of his right hand desirous to be slain,
The bouldrest borne, and worthiest in the filde ;

And as a wight, now wery of his lyfe,
And seeking death, in fyrst front of his rage,
Comes desperately to Alexanders face,
At him with darts one after other throws,
With recktlesseworde and clamour him provokes,
And sayth, Neclanacks vastard shamefull stayne
Of mothers bed, why lokest thou thy strokes,
Cowardes among, I urn thee to me, in case
Manhood there be so much left in thy heart,
Come fight with me, that on my helmet weare
Appollo's laurell both for learnings laude,
And : ke for martiall praise, that in my shield
The even fold Sophie of Minerve containe.
A match more mete, Syr King, then any here.
The noble prince moved takes ruth upon
The wilful wight, and with soft words ayen,
O monstrous man (quoth he) what so thou art,
I pray thee live, now not with thy death
This lodge of Lo.e, the muses mansions marre ;
That treasure houle this hand shall never ipoyle,

THE HISTORY OF THE

My sword shall never bruise that skilfull brayne,
Long gather'd heapes of science sone to spill;
O how fayre fruites may you to mortall men
From Wildoms garden give; how many may
By you the wiser and the better prove:
What error, what mad moode, what frenzy thee
Perwadeth to be downe, sent to depe Averne,
Where no artes flourish, nor no knowledge vailes
For all the'e sawes. When thus the sovereign said,

Alighted Zorax with sword unsheathed,
The careless king there smote above the greve,
As th' opening of his quistes wounded him,
So that the blood down trailed on the ground:
The Macedon perceiving hurt, gan gashe,
But yet his mynde he bent in any wise
Hym to forbear, sett spurs unto his stede,
And turnde away, lest anger of his smarte
Shoulde cause revenger hand deale baleful blowes.
But of the Macedonian chieftaines knights,
One Melcager could not bear this sight,
But ran upon the said Egyptian rude,
And cutt him in both knees: he fell to ground,
Wherewith a whole rout came of souldiours
And all in pieces bewed the fely segg, [sterne,
But happely the soule fled to the starres,
Where, under him, he hath full sight of all,
Whereat he gazed here with reaching looke.
The Persians waid such sapience to forgoe,
The very sone the Macedonians wist
He would have lived, king Alexander selfe Demde him a man unmet to dye at all;
Who wonne like praise for conquest of his Yre,
As for stout men in field that day subdued,
Who princes taught how to discern a man,
That in his head so rare a jewel beares,
But over all those same Camenes, those same,
Divine Camenes, whose honour he procured,
As tender parent doth his daughters weale,
Lamented, and for thanks, all that they can,
Do cherish hym decaist, and sett him free,
From dark oblivion of devouring death.

Barclay wrote about 1550; his chief work is the Ship of Fools, of which the following extract will shew his style.

Of Mockers and Scorners, and false Accusers.

O Heartles fooles, haste here to our doctrine,
Leave off the wayes of your enornitie,
Enforce you to my preceptes to encline,
For here shall I shewe you good and veritie:
Encline, and ye finde shall great prosperitie,
Ensuing the doctrines of our fathers olde,
And godly lawes in valour worth great golde.

Who that will followe the graces manyfolde
Which are in vertue, shall find auancement:
Wherefore ye fooles that in your sinne are bolde,
Enfue ye wisdom, and leave your lewde intent,
Wisdom is the way of men most excellent:
Therefore haue done, and shortly speede your pace,
To quanynt yourself and company with grace.

Learne what is vertue, therein is great solace,
Learne what is truth, fadnes and prudence,
Let grutchie be gone, and graunie purchase,
Perfike your folly and inconuenience,

Cesse to be fooles, and sy to sue offence,
Followe ye vertue, chief roote of godlynes
For it and wisdom is ground of cleynynes.

Wisdom and vertue two thinges are doubtles,
Whiche man endueth with honour speciall,
But such heartes as slepe in foolishnes
Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all;
But in this little barge in principall
All foolish mockers I purpose to reprove,
Clawe he his backe that feeteth icche or greue.

Mockers and scorners that are harde of beleue,
With a rough combe here will I clawe and grate,
To proue if they will from their vice reueue,
And lesue their folly, which causeth great debate: [estate,

Suche caytives spare neyther poore man nor
And where their selfe are moste worthy derision,
Other men to scorne is all their most condition.

Yet are mo fooles of this abuson,
Whiche of wise men despiseth the doctrine,
With mowes, mockes, scornes, and collasion,
Rewarding rebukes for their good disciplin:
Shewe to suche wisdom, yet shall they not encline.

Unto the same, but set nothing thereby,
But mocke thy doctrine, still or openly.

So in the worlde it appeareth commonly.
That who that will a foole rebuke or blame,
A mocke or mowe shall he haue by and by:
Thus in derision haue fooles their speciall game.
Correct a wise man that woulde eschue ill name.
And sayne would learne, and his lewde life amende,

And to thy wordes he gladly shall intende.
If by misfortune a rightwise man offende,
He gladly suffereth a iuste correction,
And him that hym teacheth taketh for his frende,
Him selfe putting meekly unto subreccion,
Following his preceptes and good direction.
But yf that one a foole rebuke or blame,
He shall his teacher hate, slander and disarme.

Howbeit his wordes oft turne to his owne shame.

And his owne dartes retourne to him agayne,
And so is he fore wounded with the same,
And in wo endeth, great misery and payne.
It also proued full often is certayne,
That they that on mockers alway their mindes cast,

Shall of all other be mocked at the last.

He that goeth sight, steadfast, sure, and fast,
May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame

And he that is white may well his scornes cast.
Agaynst a man of lode: but no man ought to blame

Another vice, while he vseth the same.
But who that of sinne is cleane in deede and thought, [nought.

May him well scorne whose living is sturke
The scornes of Nabal full nere should haue been bought,

If Abigail his wife discrete and sage,
Had not by kindnes right crasty meenes sought,
The wrath of Dauid to temper and asswage.

Hath

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Had not two beares in their fury and rage
Two sad fortie children rent and torne,
For they the prophete Helyseus did scorne.

So might they curse the time that they were borne,

For their mocking of this prophete diuine :
So many other of this sort often moorne
For their lewde mockes, and salt into ruine.
Thus it is folly for wise men to incline,
To this lewde flocke of fooles, for see thou shall
Them moste scorning that are most bad of all.

The Lemoy of Barclay to the fooles.

Ye mocking fooles that in scorne set your ioy,
Proudly despising Gods position :
Take ye example by Cham the sonne of Noy,
Which laughed his father vnto derision,
Which him after cursed for his transgression,
And made him seruant to all his lyne and stocke.

So shall ye crytiffe at the conclusion,
Sinee ye are nought, and others scorne and mocke.

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. Wilson, a man celebrated for the politeness of his style, and the extent of his knowledge : what was the state of our language in his time, the following may be of use to show.

Pronunciation is an apte ordering bothe of the voyce, countenance, and all the whole bodye, accordyng to the worthines of suche wordes and matter as by speache are declared. The vse hereof is suche for anye one that liketh to haue prayse for tellyng his tale in open assemblie, that hauing a good tongue, and a comely countenance, he shal be thought to passe all other that haue not the like vtterance : though they haue much better learning. The tongue geneth a certayne grace to euery matter, and beautifieth the cause in like maner, as a swete soundyng lute muche setteth forthe a meane deuised ballade. Or as the sounde of a good instrumente styrrerh the hearers, and moueth muche delite, so a cleare soundyng voice comforteth muche our deintie eares, with much sweete melodie, and causeth vs to allowe the matter rather for the reporters sake, then the reporter for the tratters sake. Demosthenes therefore, that famous oratour, beyng asked what was the chiefe point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praise to Pronunciation ; being demaunded, what was the seconde, and the thirde, he still made answer, Pronunciation, and would make none other answer, till they leste askyng, declaring hereby that arte without vtterance can dooe nothing, vtterance without arte can dooe right muche. And no doubt that man is in outwarde appearance halfe a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue and a comely gesture of his body. Æchines lykwyse beyng bannished his countrie through Demosthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demosthenes answered thereunto, by force whereof he was bannished, and all they marueiled muche at the excellencie of the same : then (quod Æchines) you would haue marueiled much more if you had heard hymselfe speak it. Thus beyng cast in miserie and bannished for euer, he could not but geue such great reporte of his deadly and mortal ennemy.

Thus haue I deduced the English language from the age of Alfred to that of Elizabeth ; in some parts imperfectly for want of materials ; but I hope, at least, in such a manner that its progress many be easily traced, and the gradations obserued, by which it advanced from its first rudeness to its present elegance.

A GRAMMAR, &c.

A slender is found in most words, as face, care; and in words ending in ation, as creation, glorification, generation.

The a slender is the proper English a, called very justly by Erpenius, in his Arabick Grammar, a Asphum cum e misum, as having a middle sound between the open a and the e. The French have a similar sound in the word pair, and a their e masculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly resembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, jealousy, glass.

A broad resembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as fault, mault; and we still say fault, mault. This was probably the Saxon sound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the rustick pronunciation: as naue for man, baund for band.

The short a approaches to the a open, as gate.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always slender, as graze, fame.

A forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or o. As or ay, as in plain, vain, gay, clay, has the sound of the long and slender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, vane.

As or aw has the sound of the German a, as raw, soughty.

As is sometimes found in Latin words not completely naturalized or assimilated, but is no English diphthong; and is more properly expressed by æ, as Cæsar, Æneas.

E is the letter which occurs most frequently in the English language.

E is long, as in scene; or short, as in cellar, separate, celebrate, men, then.

E is always short before a double consonant, two consonants, relent, midlar, reptile, serpent, cellar, cessation, blessing, sell, selling, &c.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monosyllables that have no other vowel, metre; or proper names as Penelope, Phoebe, Dervile, being used to modify the foregoing consonant, as place, once, bedge, oblige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as bæne, bâne; cæn, câne; pæn, pâne; tæn, tâne; ræb, rôbe; pæp, pôpe; scætre, cûre; tûb, tûbe.

Nearly all words which now terminate in consonants ended anciently in e, as year, year; day, wildness; which e probably had the force of the French e feminine, and constituted a syllable with its associate consonant; for, in old French, words are sometimes divided thus, clea-re, the. turned-ge. Thus e was perhaps for the vocal or silent in poetry as convenience requires; but it has been long wholly mute. Cambric is the silent e.

E does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glow, live, give.

It has sometimes in the end of words a sound obscure, and scarcely perceptible, as open, shopen, spotten, thistle, participle, metre, lucre.

E forms a diphthong with a; as near, with i, as deign, receive; and with u, or o, as new, few.

Ea sounds like e long, as mean; or like ee, as dear, clear, near.

Ei is sounded like e long, as seine, perceiving.

Eu sounds as u long and soft.

E, a, u are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the sound of u.

E may be said to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, sleeping.

Eo is found in yeomen, where it is sounded as e short; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a sound, long, as fine; and short, as fin.

That is eminently observable in i, which may be likewise remarked in other letters, that the short sound is not the long sound contracted, but a sound wholly different.

The long found in monosyllables is always marked by the e final, as thin, thine.

I is often sounded before r as a short u; as stir, first, birth.

I forms a diphthong only with e, as field, shield, which is sounded as the double ee; except friend, which is sounded as frænd.

I is joined with eu in few, and ew in view; which triphthongs are sounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bône, obedient, corroding; or short, as black, knock, oblique, hill.

Women in pronounced wimen.

The short o has sometimes the sound of a close u, as son, come.

O coalesces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the sound of o long.

O is united to e in some words derived from Greek, as economy; but oe being not an English diphthong, they are better written as they are sounded, with only e, economy.

With i, as oil, joil, moil, noisome.

This coalition of letters seems to unite the sounds of the two letters as far as two sounds can be united without being destroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With a, as boat, boat, cooler; oo has the sound of the Italian u.

With u or ow, as our, power, flower; but in some words has only the sound of o long, as in soul, bowel, jour, grow. These different sounds are used to distinguish different significations; as bow, an instrument for shooting; bow, a depression of the head; sew, the she of a boar; sew, to scatter seed; bowel, an orbicular body; bowel, a wooden vessel.

Ou is sometimes pronounced like o soft, as ours; sometimes like o short, as cough; sometimes times like u close, as could; or u open, as rough, tough; which use only can teach.

Ou is frequently used in the last syllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made English, as honour, labour, favour, from honor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have ejected the u, without considering that the last syllable gives the sound neither of o nor u, but a sound between them, if not compounded of both; besides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honneur, faveur.

U.

U is long in use, confusion; or short, as us, concussion.

It coalesces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in these combinations the force of the w consonant, as quaff, quest, quit, quite, language; sometimes in us the i loses its sound, as in juice. It is sometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, guise, guise, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no sound.

Y.

Y is a vowel, which, as Quintilian observes, is one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It supplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i, as dying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as destroy, destrayer, betray, betrayed, betrayers; pray, prayer; say, sayr; day, days.

Y being the Saxon vowel ý, which was commonly used where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

GENERAL RULES.

A vowel in the beginning or middle syllable, before two consonants, is commonly short, as opportunity.

In monosyllables a single vowel before a single consonant is short, as flag, frag.

B.

B has one unvaried sound, such as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, subtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is used before l and r, as black, brown,

C.

C has before e and i the sound of s, as facere, centric, century, circular, cistern, city, faciety; before a, o, and u, it sounds like k, as calm, conceiv, copper, incorporate, curiosity, conspicience.

C might be omitted in the language without loss, since one of its sounds might be supplied by s, and the other by k, but that it preserves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captive from captivus.

Ch has a sound which is analysed into tsb, as church, chin, crutch. It is the same sound which the Italians give to the c simple before i and e, is citta, cerre.

Ch is sounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymist, scheme, choler. Arch is commonly sounded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the English sound of ch before a consonant, as archbishop.

Ch, in some French words not yet assimilated, sounds like st, as machine, chaise.

C, according to English orthography, never ends a word; therefore we write slick, black, which were originally sticke, blacke, in such words. C is now mute.

It is used before l and r, as clock, crest.

D is uniform in its sound, as death, diligent.

It is used before r, as draw, dress; and w, as dwell.

F.

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, it is numbered by the grammarians among the semivowels, yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiously sounded before a liquid, as flash, fly, freight. It has an unvariable sound, except that of sometimes is spoken nearly as ov.

G.

G has two sounds, one hard, as in gay, gear; the other soft, as in gem, giant.

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, sung, long, frag.

Before e and i the sound is uncertain.

G before e is soft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, geese, geit, gewgaw, and derivatives from words ending in g, as singing, stranger, and generally before er at the end of words, as finger.

G is mute before u, as guess, sign, foreign.

G before i is hard, as give, except in giant, gigantic, gibbet, gibe, giblets, gilet, gill, gilliver, gin, ginger, gingle, gipsy.

Gh in the beginning of a word has the sound of the hard g, as ghostly; in the middle, and sometime at the end, it is quite silent, as though, right, sought, spoken tho', rite, jute.

It has often at the end the sound of f, as laugh; whence laughter retains the same sound in the middle; cough, trough, jough, tough, enough, slough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a consonant deeply guttural, which is still continued among the Scotch.

G is used before h, l, and r.

H.

H is a note of aspiration, and shows that the following

moving vowel must be pronounced with a strong emission of the breath, as bat, horse.

k seldom, perhaps never, begins any but the first syllable, in which it is always sounded with a mild breath, except in hair, harb, hyster, humor, humble, hough, humour, and their derivatives.

J.

7 consonant sounds uniformly like the soft j, and is therefore a letter useless, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jester, jealous, juice.

K.

K has the sound of hard c, and is used before e and i, where, according to English analogy, c would be soft, as kept, king, shirt, speech, for so it should be written, not seep, speak.

It is used before u, as knell, knave, but totally loses its sound.

K is never doubled; but c is used before it to strengthen the vowel by a double consonant, as cake, pickle.

L has in English the same liquid sound as in other languages.

The custom is to double the l at the end of monosyllables, as kall, will, fall. These words were originally written kille, wille, falle; and when the e first grew silent, and was afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is sometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, camel, could, would, psalm, talk, salmon, salmon.

The Saxons, who delighted in guttural sounds, sometimes aspirated the l at the beginning of words, as hlaſ, a hlaſ, or bread, hlaepod, a weald; but this pronunciation is now disused.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almost mute, as table, ghostly.

M.

M has always the same sound, as marmar, monumental.

N.

N has always the same sound, as noble, numbers.

N is sometimes mute after m, as dama, condemna, hymn.

P.

P has always the same sound, which the Welsh and Germans confound with B.

P is sometimes mute, as in psalm, and between m and t, as tempt.

Pb is used for f in words derived from the Greek, as philosophy, philanthropy, Phisop.

Q.

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a sound which our Saxon ancestors well expressed by cy, co, as quadrant, queen, equusian, quill, enquiry, quire, quotidian. Q is never followed by s.

Q is sometimes sounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, risque, chequer.

R.

R has the same rough snarling sound as in other tongues.

The Saxons used often to put b before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rb is used in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrhine, catarrhus, rheum, rheumatism, rhyme.

S has a hissing sound, as fibilation, fisher.

A single s seldom ends any word, except the third person of verbs, as lucet, grows; and the plurals of nouns, as treas, bushes, discreets; the pronouns this, his, ursi, youris, us; the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, superfluous; the close being always either in se, as house, horse, or in is, as grais, dress, blest, legis, anciently grass, dress.

S single, at the end of words, has a grosser sound, like that of z, as treas, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, superfluous.

It sounds like z before ion, if a vowel goes before, as intrusion; and like f, if it follows a consonant, as conversion.

It sounds like z before e mute, as refuse, and before y final, as refuge; and in those words, business, desire, wisdom, prison, prisoner, present, present, damsel, casement.

It is the peculiar quality of f, that it may be sounded before all consonants, except x and z, in which f is comprised, x being only ks, and z, a hard or gross f. This f is therefore termed by grammarians ſua pitiſtatis litera: the reason of which the learned Dr Clarke erroneously supposed to be, that in some words it might be doubled at pleasure. Thus we find in several languages:

ſcissus, scatter, ſdegus, ſdruculo, ſſuollare, coſſe, ſgembrare, ſgranare, ſboke, ſlumber, ſmell, ſriſe, ſpace, ſplendor, ſpring, ſquare, ſtrewe, ſtep, ſtrength, ſtramen, ſventura, ſwell.

S is mute in iſle, iſland, demiſe, viſcount.

T has its customary sound, as take, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the sound of ſi, as ſalvation, except an ſ goes before, as quiſition, excepting likewise derivatives from y, as mighty, mightier.

Tb has two sounds; the one soft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The sound is soft in these words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds, that, these, than, thee, thy, thine, their, they, thus.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

th-s, these, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is softened at the end of a word, an e silent must be added, as breath, breathe, cloth, clothe.

V.

V has a sound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f in the Islandick alphabet, v is only distinguished by a discritical point.

W

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, some grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a consonant; and not rather as it is called a double u or ou, as water may be resolved in ouater; but letters of the same sound are always reckoned consonants in other alphabets: and it may be observed, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as freshy, winter.

Wh has a sound accounted peculiar to the English, which the Saxons better expressed by hp, lew, as what, whence, whitening; in where only, and sometimes in wherefore, wh is sounded like a simple b.

X.

X begins no English word; it has the sound of ks, as axe, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a consonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either vowel or diphthong, is a consonant, as ye, young. It is thought by some to be in all cases a vowel. But it may be observed of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as rosy youth.

Z.

Z begins no word originally English; it has the sound as its name izzard or f bard expresses, of an f uttered with closer compression of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, freeze.

In orthography I have supposed orthopy, or just utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expressing certain sounds by proper characters. I have therefore observed in what words any of the letters are mute.

Most of the writers of English grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwise than they are written, and seem not sufficiently to have considered, that of English, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one cursory and colloquial, the other regular and solemn. The curious pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unskillfulness, or affectation. The solemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always less remote from the orthography, and less liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the cursory speech of those with whom they happened to converse; and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often established the jargon of the lowest of the people as the model of speech.

For pronunciation the best general rule is, to consider those as the most elegant speakers who deviate least from the written words.

There have been many schemes offered for the emendation and settlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earliest writers in rude ages, was at first very various and uncertain, and is yet sufficiently irregular. Of these reformers some have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without considering that this is to measure by a shadow, to take that for a model or standard which is changing while they apply it. Others, less absurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelihood of success, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of sounds, that every sound may have its own character, and every character a single sound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a synod of grammarians upon principles of science. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books useless? or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confusion and perplexity of such an alteration?

Some of these schemes I shall however exhibit, which may be used according to the diversities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or terror to innovators.

One of the first who proposed a scheme of regular orthography, was Sir Thomas Smith, secretary of state to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and much practised in grammatical disquisitions. Had he written the following lines according to his scheme, they would have appeared thus:

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
The glory of the priesthood, and the shame,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove thole holy Vandals off the stage.

At lengd Erasmus, dat grēt injur'd nām,
De glori of de prēthūd, and de zām,
Stemmd de wild torrent of a barb'rous æg,
And drōv thōs hōli Vandals off de stāg

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gill, the celebrated master of St. Paul's school in London; which I cannot represent exactly for want of types, but will approach speech as nearly as I can by means of characters now in use so as to make it understood, exhibiting two fanzas of Spenser in the reformed orthography.

Spenser, book iii. canto 5.

Thankful wretch, said he, is this the need,
With which her sovereign mercy thou dost quite?

Thy life the saved by her gracious deed;
But thou dost ween with villainous despight,
To blot her honour, and her heavenly light.
Die, rather die, than so disloyally,
Deem of her high desert, or seem so light.
Fair death it is to shun more shame; then die.

Die, rather die, than ever love disloyally.
But if to love disloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her, that from death's door
Me brought? ah! far be such reproach from me.

What can I less do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot restore?
Die, rather die, and dying do her serve,
Dying her serve, and living her adore.
Thy life she gave, thy life she doth deserve:
Die, rather die, than ever from her service swerve.

Thankful wret, said he, is this the need,
With which her sovereign mercy thou dost quite?
Dij lje fj leud bj her gracios dijd;
But thou dost ween with villainous despight,
To blot her honour, and her heavenly light.
Di, reder dj, dan so disloyally,
Dijn of her hie desert, or sijn so light.
Fair death it is to shun more shame; then dj.
Dj, reder dj, dan en r lud disloyally.
But if to love disloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her that from death's door
Me brought? ah! far be such reproach from mj.
Wat kan I les du dan her lud derfor,
Sith I her due reward cannot restore?
Di, reder dj, and dijig du her sier,
Dijg her serve, and living her adore.
Dij lje fj gæb, dij lje fj dub deserv;
Di, reder dj, dan en r from her sier is swerv.

Dr Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an understanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He seems to have been more sanguine than his predecessors, for he printed his book according to his own scheme: which the following specimen will make easily understood.

But whenever you have occasion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to stand upon your guard, than to trust to their gentleness. For the safeguard of your face, which they have most mind unto, provide a purfhood, made of coarse bouldering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more safety is to be lined against the eminent parts with woollen cloth. First cut a piece about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being sowed in his place, join unto it two short pieces of the same breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the cheeks, and then set another piece about the breadth of a shilling against the top of the nose. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may serve though it be in the heat of the day.

But penſeöever you hav' occasion to trouble their patience, or to com among them being troubled, it is better to stand upon your guard, than to trust to their gentleness. In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography; as appears among other books, in such editions of the works of Milton as were published by himself. Of these reformers every man had his own scheme; but they agreed in one general design of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting such as they thought superfluous. Some of them would have written these lines thus:

—All the erth
Shall then be paradis, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier daie.

Bishop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philosophical language, proposed, without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography: by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus:

Yar Fádher wiith art in héven, halloed bi dhyi nám, dhyi cingdým cým, dhyi will be dýa in erth as it is in héven, &c.

We have since had no general reformers; but some ingenious men have endeavoured to deserve well of their country, by writing honour and labor for honor and labour, and red for read.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

read in the present-tense, sais for says, repete for repeat, explane for explain, or declame for declaim. Of these it may be said, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm; both because they have innovated little, and because few have followed them.

ET Y M O L O G Y.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the sense of the same word is diversified; as herse, herjes; I love, I loved.

Of the A R T I C L E.

The English have two articles, an, a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite signification, and means one with some reference to more; as, This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a sword, that is, some sword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of those that are men, than one of those that are boys. An army might enter without resistance, that is, any army.

In the senses in which we use a or an in the singular, we speak in the plural without an article; as, these are good books.

I have made an the original article, because it is only the Saxon an, or æn, one, applied to a new use, as the German ein, and the French un; the n being cut off before a consonant in the speed of utterance.

Grammarians of the last age direct, that an should be used before t; whence it appears that the English anciently aspirated less. An is still used before the silent t, as, an herb, an honest man: but otherwise a: as, A horse, a horse, my kingdom for a horse.

Shakespeare.

The has a particular and definite signification.

The fruit

Of that forbidden tree, whole mortal taste
Brought death into the world. Milton.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the use of man; that is, for those beings that are cattle, and his use that is man.

The is used in both numbers.

I am as free as Nature first made man,
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran.

Dryden.

Many words are used without articles; as

1. Proper names, as John, Alexander, Longinus, Aristarchus, Jerusalem, Athena, Rome, London. God is used as a proper name.

2. Abstract names, as blackness, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, ugliness, love, hatred, anger, goodnature, kindness.

3. Words in which nothing but the mere being of any thing is implied: This is not beer, but water; This is not brass, but steel.

Of NOUNS SUBSTANTIVES.

The relations of English nouns to words going before or following are not expressed by cases, or changes of termination, but as in most of the other European languages by prepositions, unless we may be said to have a genitive case.

Singular.

Nom. Magister,	a Master, the Master.
Gen. Magistrī,	of a Master, of the Master, or Masters, the Masters.
Dat. Magistro,	to a Master, to the Master.
Acc. Magistrum,	a Master, the Master.
Voc. Magister,	Master, O Master.
Alb. Magistro,	from a Master, from the Master.

Plural.

Nom. Magistrī,	Masters, the Masters.
Gen. Magistrorum,	of Masters, of the Masters.
Dat. Magistris,	to Masters, to the Masters.
Acc. Magistros,	Masters, the Masters.
Voc. Magistrī,	Masters, O Masters.
Abl. Magistris,	from Masters, from the Masters.

Our nouns are therefore only declined thus:

Master,	Gen. Masters.	Plur. Masters.
Scholar,	Gen. Scholars.	Plur. Scholars.

These genitives are always written with a mark of elision, master's, scholar's, according to an opinion long received, that the 's is a contraction of his, as the soldier's valour, for the soldier his valour: but this cannot be the true original, because 's is put to female nouns, Woman's beauty; the Virgin's delicacy; Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate: and collective nouns, as Woman's passions; the rabble's insolence; the multitude's folly; in all these cases it is apparent that his cannot be understood. We say likewise the foundation's strength, the diamond's lustre, the winter's severity; but in these cases his may be understood, he and his having formerly been applied to neuters in the place now supplied by it and its.

The learned, the sagacious Wallis, to whom every English grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective possessive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the same to the genitive in equum decus, Troja oris, or any other Latin genitive.

This termination of the noun seems to constitute a real genitive indicating possession. It is derived to us from those who declined smith, a smith; Gen. smithes, of a smith; Plur. smithes, or smithas, smiths; and so in two other of their seven declensions.

ENGLISH TONGUE,

It is a farther confirmation of this opinion, that in the old poets both the genitive and plural were longer by a syllable than the original word; ruin, for knights, in Chaucer; leavis, for leaves, in Spenser.

When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the same with the nominative, as Venus temple.

The plural is formed by adding s, as table, tables; flax, flaxes; fisher, fishers; wood, woods; a is where s could not otherwise be sounded, as murder, s, fish, x, s; after c sounded like s, and like z; the vowel e is vocal before s, as lance, lances; strage, strages.

The formation of the plural and genitive singular is the same.

A few words yet make the plural in a, as men, women, oxen, foemen, and more antiently eyes and shoes. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonic dialects.

Words that end in f commonly form their plural by ves, as leaf, leaves; calv, calves.

Except a few, maff, maffs; chief, chiefs. So maff, maffs, chief, chiefs; maff, maffs, chief, chiefs.

Irregular plurals are teeth from tooth, lice from louse, maffs from maff, geese from goose, feet from foot, daughters from daughter, peas from pea, brethren from brother, children from child.

Plurals ending in s have no genitives; but we say the women's excellencies, and Weigh the measure against the ladies hairs. Pope.

Dr. Wallis thinks the Lords house may be said for the house of Lords; but such phrases are not now in use; and surely an English ear rebels against them.

OF ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives in the English language are wholly unchangeable; having neither case, gender, nor number, and being added to substantives in all relations without any change; as, a good woman, that woman, of a good woman; a good man, good men, of good men.

The Comparison of Adjectives.

The comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the superlative by adding est, to the positive; as, fair, fairer, fairest; lovely, lovelier, loveliest; sweet, sweeter, sweetest; low, lower, lowest; high, higher, highest.

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, best; bad, worse, worst; little, less, least; more, never, next; much, more, most; many, more, more (or more), most (or most); late, later, latest or last.

Some comparatives form a superlative by adding est, as neither, neitherer; outer, outermost; inner, innermost; upper, uppermost; lower, lowermost.

Most is sometimes added to a substantive, as most beautiful.

Many adjectives do not admit of comparison by termination, and are only compared by more and most, as benevolent, more benevolent, most benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by more and most, even when they have comparatives and superlatives regularly formed; as fair; fairer; or more fair; fairest, or most fair.

In adjectives that admit a regular comparison, the comparative more is oftener used than the superlative most, as more fair is oftener written for fairer, than most fair for fairest.

The comparison of adjectives is very uncertain; and being much regulated by commodiousness of utterance, or agreeableness of sound, is not easily reduced to rules.

Monosyllables are commonly compared.

Poly-syllables, or words of more than two syllables, are seldom compared otherwise than by more and most, as deplorable, more deplorable, most deplorable.

Disyllables are seldom compared if they terminate in some, as passion, tailsome; in ful, as careful, splendid, dreadful; in ing, as trifling, charming; in ous, as poison; in less, as careless, harmless; in ed, as wretched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, ferocious; in ain, as certain; in ive, as misfree; in dy, as windy; in fy, as passy; in ky, as rocky, except lucky; in my, as romy; in ny, as shiny; in py, as ropy, except happy; in ry, as teary.

Some comparatives and superlatives are yet found in good writers formed without regard to the foregoing rules; but in a language subjected to so little and so lately to grammar, such anomalies must frequently occur.

So body is compared by Milton.

She in badish covert hid,
Tun'd her nocturnal note. Parad. Lost.

And virtuous.

What the wills to say or do,
Seems wisest, virtuous, discreetest, best. Parad. Lost.

So trifling, by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

It is not so decorous, in respect of God, that he should immediately do all the meanest and triflingest things himself, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister.

Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

I shall be named among the famous
Of women, sung at solemn festivals.

Milton's Agonistes.

Inventive by Ascham.

Those have the inventive heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters:

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Mortal, by Bacon.

The *mortal*est poisons practised by the West Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man. Bacon.

Natural, by Wotton.

I will now deliver a few of the properest and natural

A GRAMMAR OF THE

Preterite.

Sing. I could have, thou couldst have, he could have;

Plur. We could have, ye could have, they could have.

In the like manner should is united to the verb.

There is likewise a double Preterite.

Sing. I should have had, thou shouldst have had, he should have had;

Plur. We should have had, ye should have had, they should have had.

In like manner we use, I might have had; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.

Present. To have.

Preterite. To have had.

Participle present. Having.

Participle preterite. Had.

Verb active. To love.

Indicative. Present.

Sin. I love, thou lovest, he loveth or loves;

Plur. We love, ye love, they love.

Preterite simple.

Sing. I loved, thou lovedst, he loved;

Plur. We loved, ye loved, they loved.

Preterperfect compared. I have loved, &c.

Preterplusperfect. I had loved, &c.

Future. I shall love, &c. I will love, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Love or love thou, let him love;

Plur. Let us love, love or love ye, let them love.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I love, thou love, he love;

Plur. We love, ye love, they love.

Preterite simple, as in the Indicative.

Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.

Future. I shall love, &c.

Second Future. I shall have loved, &c.

Potential.

Present. I may or can love, &c.

Preterite. I might, could, or should have loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To love.

Preterite. To have loved.

Participle present. Loving.

Participle past. Loved.

The passive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite, to the different tenses of the verb to be, which must therefore be here exhibited.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I am, thou art, he is;

Plur. We are or be, ye are or be, they are or be.

The plural be is now little in use.

Preterite.

Sing. I was, thou wast or wert, he was;

Plur. We were, ye were, they were.

Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be used in the indicative.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.

Preterplusperfect. I had been, &c.

Future. I shall or will be, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Be thou; let him be;

Plur. Let us be; be ye; let them be.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I be, thou beest, he be;

Plur. We be, ye be, they be.

Preterite.

Sing. I were, thou wert, he were;

Plur. We were, ye were, they were.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.

Future. I shall have been, &c.

Potential.

I may or can; would, could, or should be; could, would, or should have been, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be.

Preterite. To have been.

Participle present. Being.

Participle preterite. Having been.

Passive Voice. Indicative Mood.

I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c.

Conjunctive Mood.

If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c. If I shall have been loved, &c.

Potential Mood.

I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, or should be loved, &c. I might, could, or should have been loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be loved.

Preterite. To have been loved.

There is another form of English verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

To do.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

To Do.

Indicative. Present.

Eng. I do, thou dost, he doth ;

Fr. We do, ye do, they do.

Preterite.

Eng. I did, thou didst, he did ;

Fr. We did, ye did, they did.

Preterite, &c. I have done, &c. I had done.

&c.

Future. I shall or will do, &c.

Imperative.

Eng. Do thou, let him do ;

Fr. Let us do, do ye, let them do.

Conjunctive. Present.

Eng. I do, thou do, he do ;

Fr. We do, ye do, they do.

The rest are as in the Indicative.

Infinitive. To do ; to have done.

Participle. Present. Doing.

Participle preter. Done.

I do is sometimes used superfluously, as, I do love, I did love ; simply for I love or I loved ; but this is considered as a vitious mode of speech.

It is sometimes used emphatically ; as,

I do love thee, and when I love thee not,

Can it come again. Shakesp.

It is frequently joined with a negative ; as, I like her, but I do not love her ; I wished him success, but did not help him.

The imperative prohibitory is seldom applied in the second person, at least in prose, without the word do ; as, Stop him, but do not hurt him ; Praise beauty, but do not dote on it.

Its chief use is in interrogative forms of speech, in which it is used through all the persons, as, Do I live ? Dost thou strike me ? Do they rebel ? Did I complain ? Didst thou love me ? Did she die ? So likewise in negative interrogations ; Do I not yet grieve ? Did she not die ?

Do is thus only used in the simple tenses.

There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs, which, when used, may not improperly denominate them neuter passives, as they are inflected according to the passive form by the help of the verb substantive to be. They answer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French ; as,

I am risen, surrexi, Latin ; Je me suis levé.

French.

I was walked out, exieram. Je m'etois promené.

In like manner we commonly express the present tense ; as I am going, eo. I am grieving, doleo. She is dying, illa moritur. The tempest is raging, furit procella. I am pursuing an enemy, hostem insequor. So the other tenses, as We were walking, ιπρυχάσασθαι περιπαλόντες, I have been walking, I had been walking, I shall or will be walking.

There is another manner of using the active participle, which gives it a passive signification ; as, the grammar is now printing, grammatica jam nunc chartis imprimitur. The brass is forging, era excuduntur. This is, in my opinion, a vitious expression, probably corrupted from a phrase more pure, but now somewhat obsolete : The book is a printing, The brass is a forging ; a being properly at, and printing and forging verbal nouns signifying action according to the analogy of this language.

The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded, or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected, when some convenience of verification does not invite its revival. It is used among the purer writers after if, though, ere, before, whether, except, unless, whatsoever, whomsoever, and words of wishing ; as, Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not.

OF IRREGULAR VERBS.

The English verbs were divided by Ben Johnson into four conjugations, without any reason arising from the nature of the language, which has properly but one conjugation, such as has been exemplified ; from which all deviations are to be considered as anomalies, which are indeed in our monosyllable Saxon verbs and the verbs derived from them very frequent ; but almost all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages, follow the regular form.

Our verbs are observed by Dr. Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterite, and its participle. Indeed, in the scantiness of our conjugations, there is scarcely any other places for irregularity.

The first irregularity, is a slight deviation from the regular form, by rapid utterance or poetical contraction : the last syllable ed is often joined with the former by suppression of e ; as lov'd for loved ; after c, cb, sb, f, k, x, and after the consonants s, th, when more strongly pronounced, and sometimes after m, n, r, if preceded by a short vowel, t is used in pronunciation, but very seldom in writing, rather than d, as plac't, snatch't, fly'd, walk't, dwell't, smel't, for plac'd, snatch'd, fly'd, walk'd, dwell'd, smel'd ; or plac'd, snatched, flyed, walked, dwell'd, smell'd.

Those words which terminate in l or ll, or p, make their preterite in t, even in solemn language ; as, crept, felt, dwell't ; sometimes after x, ed is changed into t ; as wext : this is not constant.

A long vowel is often changed into a short one ; thus kept, slept, wapt, crept, jump't, from the verbs, to keep, to sleep, to wax, to creep, to swEEP. Where

A GRAMMAR OF THE

Where d or t go before, the additional letter d or t, in this contracted form, coalesce into one letter with the radical d or t; if t were the radical, they coalesce into t; but if d were the radical, then into d or t, as the one or the other letter may be more easily pronounced: as read, led, spread, bed, bred, bid, bid, chid, fed, bled, bred, sped, strid, rid; from the verbs, to read, to lead, to spread, to bed, to breed, to bid, to hide, to chide, to feed, to bleed, to breed, to speed, to stride, to slide, to ride. And thus, cast, hurt, cost, burst, eat, beat, sweat, fit, quit, smit, writ, bit, hit, met, shot; from the verbs, to cast, to hurt, to cost, to burst, to eat, to beat, to sweat, to fit, to quit, to smit, to writ, to bite, to hit, to meet, to shoot. And in like manner, lent, sent, rent, girt; from the verbs, to lend, to send, to rend, to gird.

The participle, preterite or passive is often formed in en, instead of ed: as, been, taken, given, slain, known, from the verbs, to be, to take, to give, to slay, to know.

Many words have two or more participles, as not only written, bitten, eaten, beaten, hidden, chidden, shotten, chosen, broken; but likewise writ, bit, eat, beat, hid, chid, shot, chose, broke, are promiscuously used in the participle, from the verbs to write, to bite, to eat, to beat, to hide, to chide, to shoot, to choose, to break, and many such like.

In the same manner sown, srown, hewn, mown, loaden, laden, as well as sow'd, srow'd, hew'd, mow'd, load'd, lad'd, from the verbs to sow, to hew, to hew, to mow, to load, to lade.

Concerning these double participles it is difficult to give any rule; but he shall seldom err who remembers, that when a verb has a participle distinct from its preterite: as wrote, wrote, written, that distinct participle is more proper and elegant, as, The book is written, is better than The book is wrote, though wrote may be used in poetry.

There are other anomalies in the preterite.

1. Win, spin, begin, swim, strick, sluck, fung, sing, sing, ring, wring, spring, swing, drink, sink, strink, stink, come, run, find, bind, grind, wind, both in the preterite imperfect and participle passive, give won, spun, begun, swum, struck, sluck, fung, swung, sung, rung, wrung, sprung, swung, drunk, sunken, brunk, stunk, come, run, found, bound, ground, wound. And most of them are also formed in the preterite by a, as began, rang, sang, sprang, drank, came, ran, and some others; but most of these are now obsolete. Some in the participle passive likewise take en, as stricken, strucken, drunken, bounden.

2. Fight, teach, reach, seek, beseech, catch, buy, bring, think, work, make fought, taught, raught, sought, besought, caught, tought, brought, thought, wrought.

But a great many of these retain likewise the regular form, as, taached, reached, beseeched, catch'd, work'd.

3. Take, shake, forake, wake, awake, stand, break, speak, bear, steer, swear, tear, weave, cleave, strive, thrive, drive, shine, rise, arise, smit, write, bide, abide, ride, chose, chose, tread, get, beget, forget, seeke, make in both preterite and participle took, forsook, wake, awake, stod, broke, spoke, bore, stare, swore, torc, wore, wove, clow, strove, throve, drove, bone, rse, arose, smote, wrote, bode, abode, rude, chose, trade, gat, begat, forgot, sod. But we say likewise, thrive, rise, smit, writ, abid, rid. In the preterite some are likewise formed by a, as brake, spake, bare, stare, sware, tare, ware, clawe, gai, begat, forgot, and perhaps some others, but more rarely. In the participle passive are many of them formed by en, as, taken, shaken, forsaken, broken, spoken, bore, storn, sworn, torc, worn, woven, cleven, thrioven, driven, risen, smitten, ridden, chofen, trodde, gotten, begotten, forgotten, sodden. And many do likewise retain the analogy in both, as waked, awaked, steared, weaved, leaved, abided, scetbed.

4. Give, bid, fit, make in the preterite gave, bade, fat; in the participle passive, given, bidden, fitten; but in both bid.

5. Draw, know, grow, throw, blow, crow, like a cock; fly, slay, see, ly, make their preterite drew, knew, grew, threw, blew, crew, slew, slew, law, lay. their participles passive by a, drawn, known, sown, grown, thrown, blown, flown, slain, seen, lien, lair. Yet from see is made sied; from go, went, from the old wend, and the participle gone.

OF DERIVATION.

That the English language may be more easily understood, it is necessary to enquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitive, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this enquiry I shall sometimes copy Dr. Wallis, and sometimes endeavour to supply his defects and rectify his errors.

Nouns are derived from verbs.

The thing implied in the verb as done or produced, is commonly either the present of the verb; as, to love, love; to fright, fright; to strike, I strike or strook, a stroke.

The action is the same with the participle present, as loving, frighting, fighting, striking.

The agent, or person acting, is denoted by the syllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, striker.

Substantives, adjective; and sometimes other parts of speech, are changed into verbs: in which case the vowel is often lengthened, or the consonant softened, as, a houl, to hause; brass, to brasse; glass, to glasse; graft, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fish, to fish; oyl, to oil; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, especially to adjectives; as, haste, to hasten; length, to lengthen; strength, to strengthen; short, to shorten; fast, to fasten; white, to whiten; black, black, to blacken; hard, to harden; soft, to soften.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as, a wide, wifely; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; earth, earthly; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, heartily; a hand, handy.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as, joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; use, useful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almost the same sense, but with some kind of diminution thereof, the termination some is added, denoting something; or in some degree; as, delight, delightsome; game, game some; irk, irksome; burden, burdensome; trouble, troublesome; light, light some; hand, hand some; alone, lonesome; toil, toil some.

On the contrary, the termination of less added to substantives, makes adjectives signifying want; as, worthless, witless, harmless, joyless, careless, helpless. Thus comfort, comfortless; sap, sapless.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or is before words derived from the Latin; as, pleasant, unpleasant; wife, unwise; profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unfruitful, unuseful, and many more.

The original English privative is un; but we often borrow from the Latin or its descendants, words already signifying privation, as insufficient, impious, indiscreet, the inseparable particles un and in have fallen into confusion, from which it is not easy to disentangle them.

Un is prefixed to all words originally English, as untrue, untruth, untaught, unbandaged.

Un is prefixed to all particles made privative adjectives, as unseeing, unassisting, unaided, undelighted, unendured.

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle present, to mark a forbearance of action, as unfeeling; but a privation of habit, as unfeeling.

Un is prefixed to most substantives which have an English termination, as unfertileness, unperfectness, which it they have borrowed terminations, take in or im, as infertility, imperfection, invidious, incivility, unactive, inactive.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is usual to retain the particle prefixed, as insincere, inelegant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungalant.

The prepositive particles dis and mis, derived from the dis and mis of the French, signify almost the same as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, since it answers to the Latin preposition de. Mis insinuates some error, and for the most part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to dislike; honour, dis honour; to honour, to grace, to dishonour, to disgrace; to deign, to disdain; chance, hap, mischance, mis hap; to take, to mistake: deed, misdeed; to use, to misuse; to employ, to misemploy; to apply, to misapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the same signification, as distinguish, distinguish; detract, detract; detraho; defame, defame; detain, detain.

The termination ly added to substantives, and sometimes to adjectives forms adjectives that import some kind of similitude or agreement, being formed by contraction of like or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The same termination ly, added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like signification; as beautiful, beautifully; sweet, sweetly; that is, in a beautiful manner; with some degree of sweetness.

The termination ish added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to substantives, imports similitude or tendency to a character; as, green, greenish; white, whitish; soft, softish; a thief, thievish; a wolf, wolfish; a child, childish.

We have forms of diminutives in substantives, though not frequent; as, a hill, a hillock; a cock, a cockril; a pike, a pikrel; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence the patronimick Hawkins, Wilkin, Thomson, and others.

Yet still there is another form of diminution among the English, by lessening the sound itself, especially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and that sometimes not so much by change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as, sup, hip, soap, sop, sipper; where, besides the extension of the vowel, there is added the French termination et; top, tip, spit, spout, bubble, baby, booby, curraw; great pronounced long, especially if with a stronger sound, great; little pronounced long, leetle, ting, tang, tong, imports a succession of smaller and then greater sounds; and so in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words.

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on oral utterance, and therefore scarcely worthy the notice of Wallis.

Of concrete adjectives are made abstract substantives, by adding the termination ness, and a few in hood or head, noting character of qualities; as, white, whiteness; hard, hardness; great, greatness; skillful, skillfulness, unskillfulness.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

ness; godhead, manhood, maidenhood, widowhood, knighthood, priesthood, likelihoood, falsehood.

There are other abstracts, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a small change being sometimes made; as long, length; strong, strength; broad, wide, breadth; wide, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, dearths; slow, slowness; merry, mirth; heal, health; well, weal; wealith; dry, drought; young, youth; and fo moon, month.

Like these are some words derived from verbs; dy death; till, tilth; grow, growth; mow, later mowth, after moweth; commonly spoken and written later math, after maith; steal, stealth; bear, birth; rue, ruth; and probably earb from to ear or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, draught.

These should rather be written flightb, frightb, only that custom prevails, lest b should be twice repeated.

The same form retain faith, spight, wreaths, wrath, broth, froth, breath, joth, worth, light, twight, and the like, whose primitives are either entirely obsolete, or seldom occur. Perhaps they are derived from sey or foy, spy, wry, wreak, brow, mow, fry, bray, say, work.

Some ending in ship, imply an office, employment or condition; as, kingship, wardship, guardianship, partnership, stewardship, headship, lordship.

Thus, worship, that is, worthship; whence worshipful, is worship.

Some few ending in dom, rick; wick, do especially denote dominion, at least state or condition; as, kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, christendom, freedom, wisdom, whoredom, bishoprick, bailiwick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the same import with us as among them, scarcely ever occurring, except in words derived from the French, as commandment, usage.

There are in English often long trains of words allied by their meaning and derivation; as, to beat, a bat, baton, a battle, a beetle, a battle-door, to batter, butter, a kind of glutinous composition for food. All these are of similar signification, and perhaps derived from the Latin batus. Thus take, touch, tickle, sack, tackle; all imply a local conjunction, from the Latin tangere, tetigi, tactum.

From two, are formed twain, twice, twenty, twelve, twins, twine, twist, twirl, twig, switch, twinge, between, betwixt, twilight, twibil.

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more subtlety than solidity, and such as perhaps might in every language be enlarged without end.

So usually implies the nose, and what relates to it. From the Latin nasus are derived the French nez and the English nose; and nosse, a promontory, as projecting like a nose. But as if from the consonants nr taken from nasus, and transposed that they may the better correspond sn denotes nasus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the nose, as snout, snore, snore, snort, snar, snicker, snail, snivel, snite, snuff, snuffle, snuffle, snarls, snudde.

There is another sn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin snus, as snake, snack, snail, snare; so likewise snap and snatch, snib, snub.

Bl implies a blast; as blow, blast, so blast, to blast; and, metaphorically, so blast one's reputation; blear, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak or weather-beaten, bleak, blay, bleak, bluffer, blurt, bliffer, blab, bladder, blub, blister, blabber-tong, blabber-check's, blasted; blotch-berrings, blaff, blaze, so blow, that is blisfom, blow; and perhaps bleed and blush.

In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the thing signified; and therefore the sounds of letters smaller, sharper, louder, closer, softer, stronger, clearer, more obscure, and more strident, do very often intimate the like effects in the things signified.

Thus words that begin with fr intimate the force and effect of the thing signified, as if probably derived from spīrum, or strenuus: as strong, strenght, strew, strike, break, stroke, stripe, frivo, frife, struggle, straw, strut, stretch, strait, strict, stright, that is, narrow, disfrain, stres, distress, string, strap, stream, streamer, strand, strip, stray, struggle, strange, bride, braddle.

St in like manner implies strength, but in a less degree, so much only as is sufficient to preserve what has already been communicated, rather than acquire any new degree; as if it were derived from the Latin sto: for example, stand, stay, that is to remain, or to prop; staff, stay, that is, to oppose; stop, to stuff, spite, to stay, that is to stop; a stay, that is an obstacle; stick, stuck, satter, hammer, sagger, sickle, sick, stake, a sharp pale, and any thing deposited at play; stock, stem, sting, to sting, sima, stick, stud, scascien, stub, fubble, to stab up, stump, whence stumble, stalk, to stalk, step, stamp, with the feet, whence to stamp, that is, to make an impression and a stamp, stow, to stow, to bestow, steward, or steward, stead, steady, steadfast, stable, a stable, a stall, to stall, stall, still, still, stallage, stall, stage, still, adj. and still, adv. stake, float, sturdy, speed, float, stallion, stiff, stark-dead, to starve with hunger or cold: stone, steel, stern, slouch, to slash blood, so stare, steep, streple, stair, standard, a stated measure; stately. In all these, and perhaps some others, st denotes something firm and fixed.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

To imply a more violent degree of motion, as throw, thrash, thrang, throb, through, threat, rattle, thrall, throw.

To imply some sort of obliquity or distortion, as war, is warlike, wrest, wrestle, wering, wring, wring, wrench, wrangle, wrinkle, writ, wreck, wrack, wretch, wrist, wrap.

To imply a silent agitation, or a softer kind of lateral motion; as, sway, swing, to sway, swag, to waver, sweet, sweep, swell, swim, swing, swift, sweet, swift, swinge.

Not is there much difference of sm in smoothe, mug, smile, smirk, smite, which signifies the time as to strike, but is a softer word; small, snail, smack, smother, smart, a smart blow properly signifies such a kind of stroke as with an originally silent motion implied in sm, proceeds to a quick violence, denoted by ar suddenly ended, as is shewn by t.

To denote a kind of adhesion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, climb, c. amber, clammy, clasp, clasp, clutch, is clutch, cloak, clog, cloy, to cloy, a clod, a cle; as a clot of blood, clented cream, a clutter, a cluster.

To imply a kind of dissipation or expansion, especially a quick one, particularly if there be an r, as if it were from spargo or separo: for example, spread, spring, sprig, sprout, sprinkle, spit, splinter, spill, spit, spatter, spatter.

To denote a kind of silent fall, or a less observable motion; as in fime, slide, slip, slipper, fly, flight, sit, flow, slack, slight, sling, slap.

And so likewise ast, in crash, rash, gasb, blast, crush, lash, flash, plash, trasp, indicates something acting more nimbly and sharply. But ast, in crash, rash, gasb, flash, blast, brush, hush, push, imply something as acting more obscurely and slowly. Yet in both there is indicated a swift and sudden motion, not instantaneous, but gradual, by the continued sound st.

Thus in ting, ting, dinz, swing, cling, fang, wring, snap, the tingling of the termination ng, and the sharpness of the vowel i, imply the continuation of a very slender motion or tremor, at length indeed vanishing, but not suddenly interrupted. But in think, wink, sink, clink, chink, tink, that end in a mute consonant, there is also indicated a sudden ending.

If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinkle, mangle, sprinkle, rattle, there is implied a frequency, or iteration of small acts. And the same frequency of a st, but less subtle by reason of the clearer vowel a, is indicated in jangle, tangle, spangle, mangle, wrangle, brangle, dangle; as also in mumble, grumble, jumble, tumble, stumple, rattle, crumble, fumble. But at the same time the close a implies something obscure or obfuscated, and a congeries of consonants mb, denotes a confused kind of rolling or tumbling, as in rattle, fumble, scramble, rattle, amble; as in these there is something acute.

In amble, the acuteness of the vowel denotes celerity. In sparkle, sp denotes dissipation, as as a c crackling, k a sudden interruption, la frequent iteration; and in like manner in sprinkle, st is as may imply the facility of the dissipated guttules. Thick and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtuse consonant, and the latter with an acute.

In like manner, in squeek, squeak, squeal, squall, brawl, waraul, yaul, spual, screech, shriek, shril, sharp, shriek, wrinkle, crack, crash, clasp, gasb, plash, crush, hush, hiss, hiss, whiff, soft, jarr, burly, curl, whirl, bus, bustle, spindle, dwindle, twine, twist, and in many more, we may observe the agreement of such sort of sounds with the things signified: and this so frequently happens, that scarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monosyllabic word, of which kind are almost all ours, emphatically expresses what in other languages can scarce be explained but by compounds, or decompositions, or sometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin; but the greatest part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as, grace, face, elegant, elegance, resemble.

Some verbs which seem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the present tense, and some from the supine.

From the present are formed, spend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; despise, despicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the supines, supplicate, supplico; demonstrate, demonstro; dispose, dispo; expatiate, expatio; suppress, supprimo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent, than that Wallis goes too far in quest of originals. Many of these which seem selected as immediate descendants from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expose, exempt.

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as, garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French jardin, gartier, bouclier, avancer, crier, plaider; though indeed, even of these, part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from some common original; as, wine, vinum; wind, ventus; went, veni; way, via; wall, vallum; walk, volvo; wail, velus; will, volo; worm, vermis; worth, virtus; wasp, waspa; day, dies; draw, traho; tame, domo, ducam; yoke, jugum, iugum; over, upper, super, super; am, sum, sum; break, frango; fly, volo; blow, flo. I make no doubt but the Teutonic is more ancient than the Latin: and it is no less certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words, not only from the Greek, especially the Æolic, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Osian and others, which have long become obsolete, received not a few from the Teutonic. It is certain, that the English, German, and other Teutonic languages, retained some derived from the Greek, which the Latin has not; as path, pfad, ax, a. ks, unit, for d, pfurd, daughter, teller, m. kie, mingle, main, fear, [k] grace.

grave, graff. To grave, to scrape, to hole, beal, from wāḡō, ζῆω, υαίω, σκαρῶμαι, μεγάλο, μαγνύω, μᾶλλον, ἐπὶ, εὐρίος, ἐλάττω, οὐλίω. Since they received these immediately from the Greeks without the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the same fountain, though they be likewise found among the Latins?

Our ancestors were studious to form borrowed words, however long, into monosyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the first syllable, especially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewise consonants of a weaker sound, retaining the stronger, which seem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the same organ, in order that the sound might become the softer; but especially transposing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, spend; exemplum, sample; excipio, scape; extraneus, strange; extractum, stretch'd; excurio, to screw; excorio, to scour; excorio, to scourge; excorioco, to scratch; and others beginning with ex: as allo, emendo, to mend; episcopos, bishop; in Danish, Bisp; epistola, pistle; hospitale, spital; Hispānia, Spain; historia, story.

The following are somewhat harder, Alexander, Sander; Elisabetha, Betty; apis, bee; aper, bar; p passing into b, as in bisbop; and by cutting off a from the beginning, which is restored in the middle; but for the old bar or bare, we now say bear; as for lang, long; for bairn, bare for stane, stone; aprugna, braven, p being changed into b, and a transposed, as in aper, and g changed into w, as in pignus, pawn; lege, law; αλωηξ, fax, cutting off the beginning, and changing p into f, as in pellis, a fell; pullus, a foal; pater, father; pavor, fear; polio, file; pleo, impleo, fill, full; piscis, fyb; and transposing o into the middle, which was taken from the beginning; apex, a piece; peak, pike; zophorus, freeze; mustum, stum; defensio, fence; dispensator, Spencer; asculto, ecouter, Fr. scout; exicalso, scrape, restoring l instead of r, and hence scrap, scrabble, scrawl; exculpo, scoop; exterritus, start; extonitus, attonitus, stunn'd; stomachus, maw; offendo, sued; oblitio, stop; audere, dare; cavere, ware, whence a-ware, beware, wary, warn, warning; for the Latin v consonant formerly sounded like our w, and the modern sound of the v consonant was formerly that of the letter f, that is, the Æolick digamma, which had the sound of φ, and the modern sound of the letter f was that of the Greek φ or ph; ulcus, ulcer, alker, fore, and hence sorry, sorrow, sorrowful; ingenium, engine, gin; icalenus, leaning, unless you would rather derive it from αλωω, whence inclino; infundibulum, funnel; gagates, jett; projecum, to jett forth a jetty; cucullus, a cowl.

There are synopses somewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina,

name; as the French homme, femme, &c., from homine, femina, nomine. Thus pagina, page; πώλησις, pot; κυτίλλα, cup; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent; precor, pray; præda, prey; specio, specular, spy; plico, ply; implico, imply; replico, reply; complico, comply; sedes episcopalis, see.

A vowel is also cut off in the middle, that the number of the syllables may be lessened; ar, amita, aunt; spiritus, fright; debitum, debt; debito, dubit; comes, comitis, count; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acqueto, to acquit; separo, to spare; stabilis, stable; stabilum, stable; palacium, palace, place; rabula, rail, rawl; wrawl, brawl, race, brable; quæstio, quest.

As also a consonant, or at least one of a softer sound, or even a whole syllable, rotundus, round; fragilis, frail; securus, sure; regula, rule; tegula, tile; subtilis, subtle; nomen, name; decanus, dean; computo, count; subitaneus, sudden; somis, supper, to fear; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as, magnus, main; dignor, deign; tingo, stain; tinctum, taint; pingo, paint; prædarii, reach.

The contractions may seem harder, where many of them meet, as xu, iauo, kyrk churck; presbyter, prist; sacrificans, sextin; frango, fregi, break, breach; fugus, fyra, beech, f changed into t, and g into ct, which are letters near-a-kin; frigeolo, freeze; frigeolo, frēb; sc into sb, as above in bishop, sbb, foinscapba, skiff, ski p, and refrigerio, refrebb; but vireolo, frebb; phlebotamus, bleam; bovina, beef; vitulina, veal; scutifer, sqare; peanitecia, peanance; sanctuarium, sanctuary, sentry; quæstio, chase; perquisitio, purcapse; anguilla, eel; insula, isle, ile, island, iland; insuleus, islet, iler; eygbe and more contractedly ey, whence Oswney, Ruley, Ely; examinare, to scan; namely, by rejecting from the beginning and end e and s according to the usual manner, the remainder xamin, which the Saxons, who did not use x, writ csamen, or esamer is contracted into scan; as from dominus, don; nomine, noun; abornio, ban; and indeed, apud examen they turned into sciamer for which we say swarme, by inserting r to denote the murmuring; thelausus, flor; sedile stool; uris, uel; sudo sweat; gaudium, gay; jocus, joy; succus, juice; catena, chain; caliga, calga; chaule, chauffe, Fr. hufe; extingui, stanch, quench, quench, stini; foras, forth; species, spice; recito, read; adjuvo, aid; ævum, ay, age, ever; floccus, look; excerpto, scrape, scrabble, sirawel; extravasus, straggle; collectum, clut, clutch; colligo, coll; recolligo, recoil; levero, swear; stridulus, strut; procurator, proxy; pulis, to pass; calamus, quill; impetere, to impeach; auxi, aux; and venefico, vand, wane; syllabare, to syllabate; piteus, pit; granum, corn; comprimio, crump, crush, crinkle.

Some may seem harsher, yet may not be rejected, for it at least appears, that some of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whose etymology is acknowledged by every body.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

body; as, Alexander, Elick, Scander, Sander, Sany, Sany; Elizabetha, Elnabeth, Elisabeth, Betty, Deft; Margareta, Margaret, Marget, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mary, Mel, Pal, Malkin, Mawks, Mooker; Mathæus, Mattha, Matthæw; Martha, Mott, Pat; Gulielmus, Wilhelmina, Groelam, Guillaume, William, Will, Bill, Witha, Wicken, Wicks, Weeks.

Thus cariophyllus, Sos; gerosilo, Ital. giriflee, paloer, Fr. gulfrewer, which the vulgar call chylflower, as it derived from the month July; peridilium, parsley, portulaca, perslain; cydonium, quince; cydoniatum, quiddeny; pericam, peach; cruca, crucke, which they corrupt to crucig, as if it took its name from the ear; gemulus geminus, a gimmel, or gimbal ring; and thus the word gimbal and jumbal is transferred to other things thus interwoven; quelques choses, hiffles. Since the origin of these, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one if the ancients have thus disfigured many, especially as they so much affected monosyllables; and, to make them sound the softer, took this liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, transposing, and softening them.

But while we derive these from the Latin, I do not mean to say, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Danish, Dutch, and Teutonick languages, and other dialects, and some taken more lately from the French or Italians, or Spaniards.

The same word according to its different significations, often has a different origin; as, to bear a burden, from ferre; but to bear, whence birth, born, b. in, comes from parire; and a bar, at least if it be of Latin original, from ferre. Thus perch, a fish, from perca; but perch, a measure, from peritica, and likewise to perch. Spell is from syllaba; but spell, an enchantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries we fix in lands that none can pass them against the master's will, from expello; and spell, a messenger, from epistola; whence gospel, good-spel, or god-spel. Thus freeze, or freeze, from frigescere; but freeze, an architectonic word from expansus; but freeze, for cloth, from Frisia, or perhaps from frigescere, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us, even monosyllables, compounded of two or more words, at least serving instead of compounds, and comprising the signification of more words than one; as, from scrip and roll comes scroll; from prand and dance, prance; from st of the verb stay, or stand and stout, is made stout; from stout and hardy, sturdy; from sp of spit or spew, and out, comes spout; from the same sp with the termination in, is spin; and adding out, spin out; and from the same sp, with it, is spit, which only differs from spout in that it is smaller, and with less noise and force; but spatter is, because of the obscure u, something between spit and spout; and by reason of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noise, but obscurely confused: whereas spatter, onac-

count of the sharper and clearer vowel a, intimates a more distinct noise, in which it chiefly differs from sputter. From the same sp, and the termination ark, comes spark, signifying a single emission of fire with a noise; namely, sp the emission, ar the more acute noise; and k, the mute consonant, intimates its being suddenly terminated; but adding l, is made the frequentative sparkle. The same sp, by adding r, that is spr, implies a more lively impetus of diffusing or expanding itself, to which adding the termination ing, it becomes spring; its vigorous spr imports, its sharpness the termination ing, and lastly in acute and tremulous, ends in the mute consonant g, denotes the sudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary signification, of a single, not a complicated exultation. Hence we call spring whatever has an elastic force; as also a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to spring, to germinate; and spring, one of the four seasons. From the same spr and out, is formed sprout, and with the termination ig, sprig; of which the following, for the most part, is the difference: sprout, of a grosser sort, imports fatter or crosser bud; sprig, of a slenderer sound, denotes a smaller shoot. In like manner, from str of the verb strive, and out, comes strout and strut. From the same str, and the termination uggle, is made struggle; and this gl imports, but without any great noise, by reason of the obscure sound of the vowel u. In like manner, from throw and roll is made trull; and almost in the same sense is trundle, from throw or thruff, and rundle. Thus graff or grough is compounded of grace and rough; and trudge from tread or not and drudge.

In these observations it is easy to discover great sagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the desire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often so made, that by the same licence any language may be deduced from any other.
2. That he makes no distinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and those which being copied from other languages, and therefore afford no example of the genius of the English language, or its laws of derivation.
3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harshness and violence, words apparently Teutonick; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.
4. That some of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

SYNTAX.

The established practice of grammarians requires that I should here treat of the Syntax; but our language has so little inflection, or variety of terminations, that its construction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally omitted; and Johnson, whose desire of following the writers upon the learned languages made him think a syntax indispen-

A GRAMMAR OF THE

vably necessary, has published such petty observations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and person; as, Thou sleepest from good; He runs to death.

Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable.

Of two substantives the noun possessive is the genitive; as, His father's glory; The sun's heat.

Verbs transitive require an oblique case; as, He loves me; You fear him.

All propositions require an oblique case: He gave this to me; He took this from me; He says this of me; He came with me.

PROSODY.

It is common for those that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Prosody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Busmattrei; and that of the French by Desmarais; and that of the English by Wallis, Cosper, and even by Jakobson though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to insert them.

Prosody comprises orthoepey, or the rules of pronunciation; and arithmetry, or the laws of versification.

Pronunciation is just, when every letter has its proper sound, and when every syllable has its proper accent, or, which in English versification is the same, its proper quantity.

The sounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not easily to be given, being subject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I shall here propose.

1. Of disyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former syllable is commonly accented, as, childish, kingdom, wretched, tedious, tedious, lower, sciffer, fairer, foremost, wretched, falsest, gaily, wicked, artist.

2. Disyllables formed by prefixing a syllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as, to begin, to beside, to bestow.

3. Of disyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former syllable, as, to descant, a descent; to consent, a consent; a contract, a contract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs seldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter syllable; as, delight, perfume.

4. All disyllables ending in y, as cranny; in our, as labour, favour; in ow, as willow, wallow, except, allow; in le, as battle, bible; in ish, as banish; in ck, as cambrick, cask; in er, as to batter; in age, as courage; in en, as fasten; in et, as quiet, accent the former syllable.

5. Disyllable nouns in er, as canter, butter, have the accent on the former syllable.

6. Disyllable verbs terminating in a consonant and e final, as comprise, escape; or having a diphthong in the last syllable, as appease, reveal; or ending in two consonants, as attend; have the accent on the latter syllable.

7. Disyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter syllable, have commonly their accent on the latter syllable, as applause; except words in ain, certain, mountain.

8. Trisyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a syllable, retain the accent of the radical word as lowliness, tenderness, contentment, waggoner, physical, bespatter, commencing, commending, assurance.

9. Trisyllables ending in ous, as gracious, arduous; in al, as capital; in ion, as mention, accent the first.

10. Trisyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the first syllable, as countenance, continuance, armament, imminent, elegant, propagate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the last, as conscience, acquiescence; or the middle syllable hath a vowel before two consonants, as promulgate.

11. Trisyllables ending in y, as entity, specify, liberty, victory, subsidy, commonly accent the first syllable.

12. Trisyllables in re or le accent the first syllable, as legible, theatre, except disciple, and some words which have a position, as example, epistle.

13. Trisyllables in ude commonly accent the first syllable, as placitude.

14. Trisyllables ending in ator or atour, as créateur, or having in the middle syllable a diphthong, as endeavour; or a vowel before two consonants, as domestick, accent the middle syllable.

15. Trisyllables that have their accent on the last syllable are commonly French, as acquiesce, repartee, magazine, or words formed by prefixing one or two syllables to an acute syllable, as immature, overcharge.

16. Polysyllables, or words of more than three syllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as arrogating, continuity, incontinently, commendable, communicableness.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as salvation, perturbation, concision; words in ator, or ator on the penult, as dedicator.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the first syllable, as amicable, unless the second syllable have a vowel before two consonants, as combustible.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as voracious, voluptuous.

20. Words ending in ly have their accent on the antepenult, as passion, activity.

These rules are not advanced as complete or infallible, but proposed as useful. Almost every rule of every language has its exceptions; and in English, as in other tongues, much must be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may be given that have escaped my observations.

Versification is the arrangement of a certain number of syllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verses are either iambick, as alibi, create; or trochaick, as billy, listy.

Our iambick measure comprises verses of four syllables.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

Most good, most fair,
Or things as rare
To call you'st lost;
For all the cost
Words can bestow,
So poorly show
Upon your praise,
That all the ways
Sense hath, comes short.
With ravish'd ears
The monarch hears,
Of fix,

This while we are abroad,
Shall we not touch our lyre?
Shall we not sing an ode?

Shall that holy fire,
In us that strongly glow'd,
In this cold air expire?

Though in the utmost Peak

A while we do remain,
Amongst the mountains bleak,

Expos'd to fleet and rain,
No sport our hours shall break,
To exercise our vein.

Who though bright Phœbus' beams
Refresh the southern ground,

And though the princely Thames

With beauteous nymphs abound,

And by old Camber's streams

Be many wonders found;

Yet many rivers clear

Here glide in silver swathes,

And what of all most dear,

Burton's delicious baths.

Strong ale and noble cheer,

T'assuage breech winter's scathes.

In places far or near,

Or famous, or obscure,

Where wisdom is the air,

Or where the most impure,

All times, and every where,

The muse is still in ure.

Drayton.

Dryden.

'Tis built of brass, the better to diffuse
The spreading sounds, and multiply the news;
Where echo's in repeated echo's play:

A mart for ever full; and open night and day.

Nor silence is within, nor voice express,

But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;

Confus'd and chiding, like the hollow roar

Of tides, receding from th' insulted shore;

Or like the broken thunder, heard from far

When Jove to distance drives the rolling war.

The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din

Of crowds, or issuing forth, or entering in:

A thorough-fare of news; where some devise

Things never heard, some mingle truth with lies;

The troubled air with empty sounds they beat,

Intent to hear, and eager to repeat.

Dryden.

In all these measures the accents are to be placed on even syllables; and every line considered by itself is more harmonious, as this rule is more strictly observed.

Our trochaick measures are

Of three syllables,

Here we may Think and pray

Before death

Stops our breath:

Other joys

Are but toys.

Of five,

In the days of old,

Stories plainly told,

Lovers felt annoy.

Of seven,

Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,

Urge not thus your haughty birth,

In these measures the accent is to be placed on the odd syllables.

These are the measures which are now in use, and above the rest those of seven, eight, and ten syllables. Our ancient poets wrote verses sometimes of twelve syllables, as Drayton's Polyol-bion.

Of all the Cambrian shires their heads that bear
so high, [eye,

And farth't survey their soils with an ambitious Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchless crouds, [clouds,

The nearest that are said to kiss the wand'ring Special audience craves, offended with the throng,

That she of all the rest neglected was so long;
Alledging for herself, when through the Saxons pride,

The godlike race of Brute to Severn's setting side
Were cruelly inforc'd, her mountains did relieve Those whom devouring war else every where did grieve. [might,)

And when all Wales beside (by fortune or by Unto her sacred foe resign'd her ancient right,
A constant maiden still she only did remain,

The last her genuine laws which stoutly did retain.

And

Of eight which is the usual measure for short poems:

And may at last my weary age

Find out the peaceful hermitage,

The hairy gown, and mossy cell,

Where I may sit, and nightly spell

Of ev'ry star the sky does shew,

And ev'ry herb that tips the dew. Milton.

Of ten, which is the common measure of heroic and tragick poetry.

Fell in the midst of this created space,

Between heav'n, earth, and skies, there stands a place

Consisting on all three; with triple bound;

Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,

And thither bring their undulating sound

The palace of loud Fame, her seat of pow'r;

Fix'd on the summit of a lofty tower;

A thousand winding entries long and wide

Receive of fresh reports a flowing tide.

A thousand crannies in the walls are made;

Nor gate nor bars exclude the busy trade.

A GRAMMAR, OF THE &c.

And as each one is prais'd for her peculiar things;
So only she is rich, in mountains, meres, and springs, [waste,
And holds herself as great in her superfluous
As others by their towns, and fruitful tillage grac'd.

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer.
And as the mind of such a man, that hath a long way gone, [let alone
And either knoweth not his way, or else would
His propos'd journey is distract.

The verse of twelve syllables, call'd an Alexandrine, is now only us'd to diversify heroick lines.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join }
The varying verse the full resounding line, }
The long majestic march, and energy divine. }

The pause in the Alexandrine must be at the sixth syllable.

The verse of fourteen syllables is now broken into a soft lyric measure of verses, consisting alternately of eight syllables and six.

She to receive thy radiant name,

Select a whiter space.

When all shall praise, and ev'ry lay

Devote a wreath to thee,

That day, for come it will, that day

Shall I lament to see.

We have another measure very quick and lively, and therefore much used in songs, which may be called the anapestick, in which the accent rests upon every third syllable.

May I govern my passions with absolute sway,
And grow wiser and better as life wears away.

In this measure a syllable is often retrenched from the first foot, as Diógenes súrlv and proud.

I think not of l'ris nor l'ris of mé.

These measures are varied by many combinations, and sometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroic measure.

'Tis heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man.

So in that of eight syllables,

They neither added nor confounded.

They neither wanted nor abounded.

In that of seven,

For resistance I could fear none.

But with twenty ships had done,

What, thou brave and happy Vernon,

Haft atchiev'd with fix alone.

In that of Gx ,

'Twas when the seas were roaring,

With hollow blasts of wind,

A damsel lay deploring,

All on a rock reclin'd.

In the anapestick,

When terrible tempests assail us,

And mountainous billows affright,

Nor power nor wealth can avail us

But skilful industry steers right.

To these measures, and their laws, may be reduced every species of English verse.

Our verification admits of few licences, except a synalapha, or elision of e in the before a vowel, as th' eternal; and more rarely of e in to, as t'accept; and a synarepha, by which two short vowels coalesce into one syllable, as questiōn, special; or a word is contracted by the expulsion of the short vowel before a liquid, as av'rice, temp'rance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples, by which the English language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a master to those that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for such as are not yet initiated in the schools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at last ineffectual.

A GENERAL

A GENERAL DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A B A

A, Has, in the English language, three different sounds. The broad sound, as, all, wall. A open, father, rather. A slender or close, is the peculiar of the English language. Of this sound we have examples in place, face, waste. 2. A, a mute f before nouns of the singular number; a man, a tree. Before a word beginning with a vowel, it is written as, as, as ox. 3. A is sometimes a noun; as great A. 4. A, is placed before a participle, or participial noun. Assuming, Prior. A begging. Dryd. 5. A has a signification, denoting proportion. The land is but a hundred a year. Addison. 6. A is used in burlesque poetry, to lengthen out a syllable.

For doves and nutmegs to the line—a. Dryd. 7. A is sometimes put for be. 8. A, in composition, seems the French a, and sometimes at, as, able, oppose, answer, a-merry, a-strip. Shakspeare. 9. A is sometimes redundant; as, arise, arouse, exist. Dryd. 10. A, in abbreviations, stands for artium, or arts.

BACKE adv. obsolete. Backwards. Spenser.

BACTOR f. [Lat. abductor.] Those who drive away or steal cattle inwards, in distinction from those that steal only a sheep or two. Bheat.

BACULUS f. [Lat. abacus.] 1. A counting-table. 2. The uppermost member of a column.

BAFT adv. [of abaptan, Sax.] From the fore-part of the ship, towards the stern.

BAISANCE f. [from the French baïsser.]

As act of reverence, a bow.

ABALIENATE v. a. [from abalieno, Lat.]

To make that another's which was our own in use. Cato. Lex. Jur.

ABALIENATION f. [Lat. abalienatio.] A giving up one's right to another person, by sale, or the course of law.

ABAND v. a. from ABANDON.

TO ABANDON v. a. [Fr. abandonner.] 1. To give up, resign, or quit. Dryd. 2. To desert. Living, Shakspeare. 3. To forsake. Spenser.

A B A

TO ABANDON OVER v. a. To give up; to resign. Dryd.

ABANDONED part. ad. 1. Given up. Shakspeare.

2. Forsaken. Corrupted in the highest degree.

ABANDONING. Desertion, forsaking.

ABANDONMENT f. [abandonnement, Fr.]

The act of abandoning.

ABANNITION f. [Lat. abannitio.] Banishment for manslaughter.

A'BARCY f. Infatiableness.

TO ABA'RE v. a. [abapian, Sax.] To make bare, uncover, or disclose.

ABARTICULATION f. [from ab, from, and articulus, a joint, Lat.] That species of articulation that has manifest motion.

TO ABA'SE v. a. [Fr. abaïsser.] To cast down, to depress, to bring low. Sidney.

ABA'SED a. [with heralds.] is a term used of the wings of eagles, when the top looks downwards towards the point of the shield; or when the wings are shut. Bailey. Chambers.

ABA'SEMENT f. The state of being brought low; depression. Ecclesiasticus.

TO ABA'SH v. a. [See BASHFUL.] To make ashamed. Milton.

TO ABA'TE v. a. [from the French abbatre.] 1. To lessen, to diminish. Davies. 2. To defect, to depress. Dryd. 3. To let down the price in selling.

TO ABATE v. a. To grow less. Dryd.

TO ABATE. [in common law.] To abate a writ, is, by some exception, to defeat or overthrow it. Cowell.

TO ABATE. [in horsemanship.] A horse is said to abate or take down his curvets; when working upon curvets, he puts his two hind-legs to the ground both at once, and observes the same exactness in all the times.

ABATEMENT f. [abatement, Fr.] 1. The act of abating. Locke. 2. The state of being abated. Arbuth. 3. The sum or quantity taken away [from galla.] Galls or galnuts are a kind of preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on various trees; but those on the oak only are used in medicine. The general history of galls is this: an insect of the fly kind, for the safety of her young, wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg of the fly, which, as soon as it is perfect, and in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen on its surface, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within it, on breaking it. Hill, Ray.
